If Germany Goes Bolshevist
Telephone Word Scrambling
The President 'Envisions'
Re-Enter Dr. Einstein

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

BEARS IN WALL STREET enjoyed themselves yesterday and the public learned about the importance of Germany's stability, even here in our stock gambling.

A rumor of revolution in Berlin was spread and refused to die.

German reparations bonds dropped sharply. American stocks fell off from 1 to 8 points.

The world's "best minds," in this country particularly, will realize that the Versailles treaty, imposing on Germany brutal, financial slavery, was not as wise as it sounded in the beginning.

Those that said, "Let the Germans pay, they lost," would not be so cheerful if they saw Germany driven into bolshevism.

Germany and Russia, both bolshevistic, on the East would make financial Europe on the West tremble for good reasons.

THE DUTCH TELEPHONE COMPANY, between The Hague and the Dutch East Indies, tries experiments in "scrambled" conversation.

That news will interest Mrs. Ruth McCormick, who says a Senate committee tapped her wire. It wouldn't do any good to tap the new telephone system in question.

THE SENDING instrument transforms words into an entirely unintelligible jargon, while the instrument connected with the ear of the receiver, puts them back into plain language.

The illegal listener-in would hear, for instance, this jumble: "trupjisnobkansep," and the legitimate listener would get the message: "Jones is bankrupt." Each letter of the real message appears in "trupjisnobkansep."

MR. GILBERT, who knows sometimes what goes on in Washington, says President Hoover, awaiting a report by his dry law commission, "won't countenance repeal, but envisions modification." The fact that he doesn't countenance repeal makes no difference, for it would be impossible to repeal the amendment. Seventeen states can prevent it, and more than 17 are "dry forever."

THE USE OF the word "envisions" is something of which President Hoover was not guilty, needless to say.

Our crime wave is bad enough without butchering the English language.

It would be interesting to know just what kind of modification the President "envisions," also what his "reaction" is on the "mass psychology" produced by wholesale and retail bootlegging, murder, racketeering and all-around devilry.

MR. EINSTEIN reappears on the front page to tell you that space is "only a theory representing a non-reality." Perhaps, he never bumped his head in the dark, and hit the door, when space suddenly came to an end.

He sends the Prussian Academy of Science a new treatise on the "theory of space conception, with Riemann metrics and extended parallelism."

YOU MUST CONCENTRATE a little when you read that. Prof. Einstein says:

"Maybe people will think I am a fool when they read it."

They will not, and on the other hand, they need not blame themselves for not understanding Dr. Einstein's "non-Euclidian conceptions of space, to which there are more than three dimensions, and where, in spite of Euclid, parallel lines, prolonged to infinity, actually do meet."

You may say that, if two lines meet somewhere in Prof. Einstein's unlimited, unreal and desolate space, they are not "parallel." But who are you, to argue with Einstein?"

T. M. ZINK, of Iowa, who hated women, leaves $40,000, to be held in trust for 75 years. When the estate amounts to $3,000,000, a library will be built, with this sign carved in stone:

"No woman admitted."

And he will only allow books written by men to be kept in the library.

THAT WOULD leave out Uncle Tom's Cabin, the Battle Hymn of the Republic, the Letters of Madame De Sevigne, interesting fragments of Sappho, and, indirectly, the books by men that amount to anything, since such books are usually inspired by women.

Mr. Zink's idea is particularly foolish, because, what brains men have are formed during the period of nine months before they are born.

AND THE BRAIN created during that period depends on the brain of the mother, and on her THINKING before the baby's birth.

Fools, planning to starve the brains of mothers, would succeed in starving the brains of their sons.

The will should be scrapped, and the money distributed among other Zinks, on the ground that it is opposed to public policy.

MRS. M'CORMICK is not the only Ruth "amid the alien corn" of politics.

Mrs. Ruth Pratt, of New York, now in Congress, is running for another term, and will probably get it.

She represents energetically the two familiar lines:

"First, then, a woman will or won't, depend on't;
If she will do't, she will;
and there's an end on't."

At present, her mind is on beating a Socialist candidate, Heywood Broun, tall and stately as a redwood tree, and her

HUNT GANG IN DRY RAID SLAYING

GIRL FLIER'S DEATH SIFTED

Bigamy Hinted as Having Bearing on Fatal Crash; Relatives Deny Suicide

International News Service.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Sept. 20. An inquest into the death of Ruth Alexander, 24, famous girl aviatrix who crashed at the start of a projected trans-continental flight, was to be held today.

Following the inquest her body will be taken to her parents at Irving, Kan.

Aviation experts and friends of the ambitious girl flier are to testify regarding the possibility of a suicide motive and flying conditions which prevailed Thursday when her plane crashed in a dense fog.

Inquiry has disclosed that Mrs. Alexander, who held the women's altitude record, postponed her projected coast-to-coast flight three times before last Thursday when she finally took off.

Friends said she did not exhibit the same ardor for this flight as characterized her recent non-stop hop from Vancouver, B. C., to Agua Caliente, Mexico.

They were inclined to attribute this to the marital tangle, disclosed after the girl flier's tragic death.

FREMONITION CLAIMED

Authorities still considered the possibility that her apparently bigamous marriage to Ensign Robert A. Elliott, Naval Reserve flier, may have been a factor in her death.

Farewell notes to Elliott and her parents were explained by friends as the result of a premonition felt by the girl that death was likely to end her flight.

WED TWICE BEFORE

Court records in Olathe and Richmond, Mo., today revealed that Miss Alexander was married twice and divorced but once before her marriage last June 21 to Elliott.

Although a divorce was sought by Mac Alexander, the woman fliers' second husband, records showed the case had never come to trial. Alexander filed the suit here last March 6 and service was obtained through publication.

Miss Alexander wrote to the clerk of the Johnson County Dis-

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—(INS.)—Maj. James Fitzmaurice, Irish Free State aviator, was admitted to the United States after being detained several hours aboard the liner Reliance which brought him from England.

The famous flier, who had no trouble getting into the country when he flew across the Atlantic in the Bremen in 1928, presented a visa which immigration inspectors said was canceled. The visa was one which he had obtained on a previous visit and which had been renewed in March.

Etna Boy, 12, Drowns Fishing in Mill Pit

Joseph Subolitch, 12, of 4 Ganster street, Etna, was drowned yesterday in a pit at the upper end of the Spang-Chalfant mill property at Etna, when he fell into a water catch pit, according to the morgue report. He fell into the pit after he removed the lid of the catch to fish, the report said. The body was removed to his home.

PHILS THREAT TO LEADERS

Associated Press.

The second division clubs of the National League, three of which have no hopes of improving their present positions, have some fine opportunities ahead for upsetting the applecarts of the three contenders for the championship.

The Phillies, doomed to finish in the cellar, already have caused a lot of trouble for Chicago's Cubs, and yesterday they gave the league-leading St. Louis Cardinals a great run for their money before going down, 7 to 3. They meet the Cards four more times in the next few days, then have one crack at Brooklyn.

Pittsburgh's Pirates, who only lost their mathematical chance of finishing first as the Cards won yesterday, start today in a two-game series with the Robins and finish their season with four games in St. Louis. The Chicago Cubs, who gained a tie with Brooklyn for second place yesterday, as they took a close decision from Boston, 5 to 4, find themselves involved with the Braves and Cincinnati for the rest of the season.

A sudden spurt on the part of any one of these trailers could cause serious damage to the hopes of its rivals.

Bishop Darlington Leaves Trust Funds

HARRISBURG, Sept. 20.—(AP.)—Trust funds totaling $12,500 are set up for relatives and personal bequests of $2,000 are made in the will of the late Bishop James Henry Darlington of the Harrisburg diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

After the trust funds and personal bequests are made, the remainder of the estate, consisting of real estate here and in Newport, R. I., and Long Island, N. Y., is given to the widow, Mrs. Ella Louise Bearns Darlington.

Police are investigating the probably fatal shooting of a man believed to be Clay Burkeholder, 50, a Pennsylvania railroad brakeman, of 7354 Hamilton avenue.

Found unconscious at the head Mohler street, early today, he was taken to the Pittsburgh Hospital, where physicians several hours later discovered a bullet hole behind his left ear. There were no powder marks, police were told.

A squad returned to the place where the man was found. A card established his probable identity.

ZIEGFELD HURT IN AUTO CRASH

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—(AP.)—Florenz Ziegfeld, musical comedy producer, escaped with a bruised forehead early today when his automobile was bumped by a surface car at 230th street and Broadway, the Bronx.

He was on his way to his home at Hastings, N. Y. The car narrowly escaped destruction when gasoline leaking from the fuel tank caught fire.

Bystanders pushed it to safety.

WELLS DEFENDS BEERY'S WIFE

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 20.—(AP.)—Raymond Wells, former motion picture director, took the center of the stage today in the marital differences of Noah Beery, film actor, and his wife, Mrs. Marguerite Beery.

Wells, returning from Las Vegas, Nev., last night, where he went with Mrs. Beery September 8, said:

"I am astonished to learn that Mr. Will Hays with his rigid laws of censorship would permit anyone in motion pictures to malign a woman."

After Mrs. Beery departed for Las Vegas and had been gone a week, Beery reported her disappearance to police, saying he would prosecute anyone responsible for enticing her away. Mrs Beery, upon her return recently, stated she had gone to Las Vegas on business and was amused and surprised to learn her departure had been a "disappearance."

Woman Leaps Out Window During Raid

Mrs. Martha Davidson, 22, of 502 Cubbage street, Carnegie, who, police say, jumped from a second story window when they raided a Negro home in which an alleged disorderly party was in progress, was to be arraigned in Morals Court today.

She was arrested at the Passavant Hospital where she was treated for a sprained ankle. Police said they raided a house at 1811 Linton street, arresting Rose James, 22, Negro, who said she resided there, and four Negro men.

Judge Thomas Lynch announced that he had been informed privately that an objection had been raised to his hearing the case.

SWEDEN MAKES ANDREE DIARY PUBLIC

Explorer's Log Reveals Stern Fight Men Made to Live; Data Declared Valuable

By WILLIAM HILLMAN,
Universal Service.

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 20.—Even up to the final hour he spent alive on the ice of the Arctic continent 33 years ago, Salomon Auguste Andree expected to "get through" to civilization.

This is revealed in the diary of the ill-fated balloon expedition leader, a resume of which was made public last night by the Swedish government. The last words in Andree's diary, dated October 2, 1897, are:

"With such comrades, one ought to get through any circumstances."

The entry was made following the breakup of the ice floe on which Andree, Nils Strindberg and Knut Fraenkel drifted toward Vioten (White Island), where the last camp was made.

TRAGIC ODYSSY

Andree's diary, consisting of 142 pages, tells the tragic odyssy of the three Swedish explorers from the start of the flight from Danes Island, Spitzbergen, in the balloon "Ornen," on July 11, 1897.

But it reveals little not already known through the publication of the story from the diary of Nils Strindberg, which was found by the Hearst-Dagens-Nyhter expedition to Vioten, and published in America exlusively by Universal Service.

While the last entry in the Andree diary was on October 2, the last words in Strindberg's "Resignation" and "Home," were written after October 17. At that time, the three men had already transferred quarters from the ice-floe to Vioten. There they built a hut and faced death. Not one of the diaries reveals the cause of death.

S. E. McClellan, who was in the twosome, is suing Lyle Jackson and Mrs. Jewel A. Iverson for $5,000. He claims Mrs. Iverson got into the fight with a club.

Curtiss-Wright May Shut Some Airports

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—(AP.)—Charles S. (Casey) Jones, president of Curtiss-Wright Flying Service, Inc., last night said his corporation was conducting a survey of its 35 airports throughout the country to determine whether some should be closed. He said business was bad, and indicated a decision may be made to suspend operations at four or five airports.

AGENT SHOT IN BREWERY AMBUSH

Ex-Pittsburgher, on Staff Of Pennington, Felled as 11 Gunmen Make Getaway

ELIZABETH, N. J., Sept. 20.—(AP.)—Federal, state and local authorities sought today to round up a gang of gunmen who ambushed a raiding party of Federal dry agents in a brewery and killed one of the agents.

John G. Fienello, 44, of Philadelphia, a former Pittsburgher, was shot and instantly killed yesterday when he walked into the boiler room of the Rising Sun brewery where a gang of 11 gunmen had lined up and disarmed his companions.

YOUNG IN CHARGE

The raiding party of five federal men came from Philadelphia. Robert Young, special supervisor of breweries in New Jersey, was in charge.

Leaving one of their number at the entrance as a guard, the agents entered the brewery. They arrested the engineer and two stokers in the boiler room. Young and three agents remained with the prisoners while Fienello went through the plant seeking others.

At that point the gunmen rushed into the boilerroom with drawn guns covering the agents, whom they disarmed. Fienello, unaware of the attack, walked into the room. One of the gunmen yelled:

"There's Fienello — let him have it."

Fienello attempted to fire his gun but it jammed. The man behind Young opened fire with two guns, killing the agent instantly. He was shot seven times.

GANG ESCAPES

City and state police were hurried to the brewery with tear gas bombs and riot guns, fearing the attackers might entrench themselves in the place, but they had fled in automobiles after disarming the agent guarding the entrance.

The brewery is in the Union Square district in the heart of Elizabeth. The plant covers two city blocks and is one of the oldest in the state.

The raid at the Rising Sun brewery was made under the direction of Prohibition Administrator John D. Pennington, of Philadelphia, who has jurisdiction over New Jersey. It took place without the knowledge of Alexander P. McPhee, deputy administrator at Newark, in immediate charge of the district.

PAYS TRIBUTE

Federal authorities said they believed the gangsters had followed the raiders from Philadelphia and attempted to waylay them, as one of the two cars in which they set out had been

PROTEST IN HILL FIGHT IN DOUBT

Joseph Engelsberg, leader of Mayor Kline's forces in the Third Ward, today said his mind "was a blank" in regard to protesting appointment by Quarter Sessions Court of nominees for judges and inspectors of election.

The Redistricting Commission yesterday set aside nominees submitted by Engelsberg, and recommended for appointment by the court those presented by his political rival for ward leadership, Alderman John J. Verona.

The law permits any person to appear before the court and protest against appointment of nominees recommended by the Redistricting Commission. Judge Harry H. Rowand probably will preside when the appointments are considered.

Engelsberg and Verona made counter charges that some of the other's nominees had been convicted or indicted of violating the election, prohibition and anti-gambling laws.

Hawks and Air Tour Pilots Fined for Having Liquor

GREAT FALLS, Mont., Sept. 20.—(AP.)—However they may value the exchange, pilots of the National Reliability Air Tour had the official apology of Great Falls today in lieu of some 50 quarts of whisky, beer and sherry confiscated by customs officers as they crossed the border.

Frank Hawks, transcontinental record holder and referee of the tour, was fined $30, Col. Charles L. Sheridan, collector said, when the flier was relieved of six quarts of sherry. Tom Colby, weather man, paid $10 for the privilege of attempting to bring across two quarts classified by Col. Sheridan as "hard liquor."

All of which brought regrets at a banquet last night in honor of pilots and passengers of the tour

"It was difficult to ask the fliers to sing 'America' after their reception," id J. W. Freeman, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

No Rest for Conan Doyle In Death, Says Widow

LONDON, Sept. 20.—(AP.)—Death has not brought rest to Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, according to a statement which the Daily Mail attributes to his widow.

Speaking of the communication she claims to have received from him, Lady Doyle is quoted as saying:

"He is very tired. Just as on earth a man after years of labor desires rest, so my husband wants peace for a while.

"He is 'studying the ropes' and learning how to get in touch the best way."

Referring the will he made, Lady Doyle declared:

"Sir Arthur would have been a very rich man but for gifts to spiritualism. He sacrificed a handsome income for the cause, but I speak for myself and my family when I say that we would much rather he spent his life and money, and so wonderfully, and that we received less."

Several bequests to further the cause of Spiritualism were made in the will. It is entirely in the author's handwriting and was drawn up last May.

Legacies of £100 each were bequeathed to the Spiritualistic Alliance of London and the National Spiritualistic Union of Manchester. The Psychic College gets £200 and £100 is left to the Spiritual Community, which holds its meetings in Crothian Hall, Wigmore street, as he put it. A like amount goes to David Gow, editor of Light, a spiritualistic magazine. The Psychic Gazette receives £50.

J. S. BLAMES WHEAT SLUMP ON SOVIET DEALS IN CHICAGO

SELL 'SHORT' 5 MILLION BUSHELS

Secretary Hyde Deplores Trading as Injury to American Crop Growers

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—(AP.)—The Russian government stood charged today by Secretary Hyde with partial responsibility for the latest record depression of wheat prices through speculation on the Chicago Exchange.

The agriculture secretary made public the accusation immediately after conferring with President Hoover. He gave out a telegram dispatched yesterday to John A. Bunnell, president of the Chicago Board of Trade, in which he asked what the exchange had done or could do to protect the American farmer against such activities. In Chicago, Bunnell said he had no definite information about the Russian selling. Hyde asserted that:

"Obviously it would be impossible for Soviet Russia to deliver grain in Chicago over our tariff of 42 cents a bushel."

5 MILLION BUSHELS

He said short selling of as much as 5,000,000 bushels in Chicago had been admitted by the all-Russian textile syndicate of New York, which, Hyde said had been shown by investigation to be a subsidiary of the Amtorg Trading Corporation. The latter is the official commercial organization of the Soviets in this country.

Peter A. Bogdanov, chairman of the board of the Amtorg, declared in New York, however, the textile concern was not a subsidiary. He said he knew nothing of wheat futures trading activity by the Soviet government.

WITHHOLD ACTION

Secretary Hyde refrained from saying what action might be taken by the government until he heard from the Chicago exchange. Means of blocking such imports are furnished by the tariff law and the government has extensive control of the grain exchanges through the grain futures act. Whether the terms of this act could be invoked to prevent the placing of selling orders from the Russian organization was not immediately made apparent.

A determined attack on Russian imports has been made in recent months from several angles, but so far unsuccessfully. Importations of lumber and pulpwood were suspended under the clause prohibiting the importation of convict-made goods, but the orders were rescinded on the ground that the evidence was not conclusive. The anti-dumping provisions which permit an embargo of goods sold below cost are available, but so far great difficulty has been met in ascertaining Russian costs of production in view of the absence of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

The textile syndicate admitted the short selling, Hyde said, after an extended investigation by the Agriculture Department, set in motion by rumors which gained circulation in newspaper articles.

GANDHI, 62 years old yesterday, spent the morning writing, making cloth, on his small hand loom, in the afternoon.

A marvelously sincere, earnest, self-starving little man is Gandhi. But something else is needed for the problem that confronts him.

forced off the road by another automobile which escaped.

Administrator Pennington said:

"Agent Fienello was one of my bravest and best officers. His loss will be keenly felt by the department. I hope the citizens of New Jersey will take corrective measures against the gangster domination of the beer racket.

"Fienello could not be bought and I feel sure the gangsters set about purposely to murder him, calling him by name before firing."

The agents destroyed 100,000 gallons of beer and opened a safe which among other things gave forth a list of the automobile registration numbers of all prohibition agents working out of Newark.

DUMP BEER

Dry Agents raided the Peter Breidt City Brewery here last Tuesday, dumping 244,750 gallons of beer. The federal men declared that during that raid gangsters set upon a federal agent guard and stopped the flow of beer into the streets.

John J. Dunne, who some time ago announced his retirement from the New Jersey beer racket, was released in $10,000 bail yesterday on charges of manufacturing liquor, maintaining a nuisance and interfering with federal officers.

The federal men declared he was the leader of the seven men who invaded a brewery, but Dunne said he was the owner of the place and in company of two men and his attorney had merely called to ask the agents to stop the destruction of the beer.

ENTERED UNDER BAIRD

Young, who was in charge of the raiding squad, resides in Pittsburgh. When Pennington assumed charge of the Pennsylvania-New Jersey-Delaware area, with headquarters in Philadelphia, Young accompanied him and was placed in charge of the beer squad.

John G. Fienello, slain dry agent, for many years resided in Bedford avenue, this city. He entered the prohibition service here when Frederick C. Baird, former administrator, was in charge of the Pittsburgh district, being a member of the group headed by Thomas Cavanaugh, assistant administrator. After six months' duty here Fienello was transferred to Philadelphia.

FAMILY AWAITS DEPORTATION

Facing deportation to British soil, a bewildered mother and her four children silently awaited action of immigration authorities in their little 3-room cottage at 1624 Fourth avenue, Arnold, today.

Alleged to have brought his family to this country four years ago, ostensibly on a visit, but failing to return home, the father, Francisco Ross, 37, alias Ernest Arthur, Italian citizen of Canada, was arrested by Immigration Director William H. Marshall, of the Pittsburgh district.

A bit bewildered by it all, the mother gathered her children, ranging from 2 to 6 years, about her and voiced a plea that they be allowed time in which to make a few clothes in preparation for the Canadian winter. Speaking English brokenly, she said:

"No like Canada. She cold. No work. No eat. Babies all time they cry for daddy. Daddy no come. Be home tomorrow maybe, yes?"

Explaining that her husband had never been in any trouble before, the mother could not understand why they are to be deported. Although the family is poverty-stricken, the little cottage was immaculately clean. The husband was employed part time by the Aluminum Company of America.

Records of the immigration office show that Ross, with his wife and children, the youngest having been born in United States, entered the country August 15, 1926, at Nigara Falls, coming from Fort William, Ont. Two years later the family was found living at Ambler, Pa., by immigration officers, but because of illness of Mrs. Ross they were not arrested, but directed to report at intervals to the Federal authorities. Later they disappeared, going to Arnold. The husband was placed in the county jail pending the deportation of the family.

REED TO DELAY POSTAL CHOICE

Senator David A. Reed will not recommend a successor to Postmaster George W. Gosser for several weeks, he said here yesterday. The recommendation, to be made to President Hoover, will come from his Pittsburgh office, he said. He was to leave today for Washington.

Aspirants to the office are James B. Anderson, of Crafton, now assistant postmaster; Lucius L. Hill, of Edgewood, assistant superintendent of mails; M. J. Shortley, head of the Federal Veterans' Bureau in Pittsburgh, and James Hagen, a letter carrier attached to the Arsenal substation.

BELL ACQUITTED IN DONOHOE MURDER

Spectator Fined, Jailed for Demonstration as Verdict Is Given; 4 Ballots Used

UNIONTOWN, Sept. 20.—Tony Bell, former county detective charged with the murder of Jack Donohoe, is a free man. He has gone back to his family.

A jury at 9:34 last night returned a verdict of acquittal after deliberating about seven hours.

Although Judge Thomas H. Hudson warned against any demonstration, several persons in the courtroom applauded as the foreman announced "Not guilty." Four women managed to escape through a side door but Albert Baker, who sat in the body of the courtroom, was detected by a tipstaff and haled before the bar. He was fined $100 and 10 days in jail.

Later he was recalled and asked why he had applauded. He denied he did, and the court stated had he admitted it and apologized, the sentence would have been canceled. Baker was taken to jail.

Not a movement was noticed in Bell's hand as he held it high, half closed, as the verdict was announced. As he was discharged by Court Crier William Cooke, he turned and kissed his wife, who had been at his side since September 1. With the adjournment of court Bell was besieged by many persons who offered their congratulations.

The jury took only four ballots. They resulted in 7-5 for acquittal, 10 to 2, 11 to 1 and then unanimous.

BOY SLAYER, 11, CONVICTED

DOYLESTOWN, Pa., Sept. 20.—(AP.)—William Davis, 11, of Philadelphia, the youngest defendant ever to be tried here on a charge of murder, was convicted of manslaughter yesterday by a jury on which there were two women. Sentence will be pronounced Monday.

Davis, who was spending the summer on a farm near here, was convicted of shooting and killing Stanley Picuski, 9, of Hilltown Township, on August 1.

"I wanted to scare the horses," he said. "I was mad at Mr. Rawa (Stanley's grandfather) for ploughing up my bean field. I didn't mean to shoot him or Stanley."

The boy demonstrated how he fired through the back of the buggy in which Stanley and his grandfather were riding.

Judge Calvin S. Boyer told the jurors the defendant would not be sent to an institution for punishment, but would be sent to a school where he could be educated.

Low Flying Pilot Stirs Beechview Parent

Mt. Washington's newly-appointed police inspector, Charles Cahill, will have to "take the air" for his first real investigation since his appointment.

C. B. Johnson, of 713 Bayridge street, Beechview, complained to the South Hills Station, that for the past several days, at about 7 p. m., a biplane flew over Beechview, and when at Bayridge street, the pilot swooped low, barely missing hitting the tops of trees.

Johnson told police he feared for the safety of the children in that district. The informer said that N. C. 388 M. was painted on one of the wings of the plane.

FLIER'S DEATH INVESTIGATED

trict Court here, saying she understood Alexander, a farmer, had received a divorce from her. Receiving no reply from the clerk, Miss Naomi Ayres, the aviatrix is believed to have concluded the decree had been granted.

FIRST MARRIAGE HIDDEN

The aviatrix's first marriage, to Aldon Fanuelson, of Irving, Kan., the home town of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Blaney, was not known to residents of Olathe nor to Alexander, according to a statement of his father.

The first marriage took place in Richmond, Mo., in 1925 and a divorce was granted a year later.

Court records at Richmond did not show whether her maiden name of Ruth Blaney had been restored as had been requested in the petition.

After her marriage in Richmond, the aviatrix set up a beauty parlor, just as she did following her marriage to Alexander in Olathe.

She and Alexander were married July 8, 1926, and went to live on Alexander's farm west of here, the girl leaving later to open "Cupid's Parlor for Beauty" in Olathe.

Separating from Alexander, she went to California and took up flying.

SUICIDE THEORY DENIED

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—(INS.)—Letters written by Ruth Alexander, girl flier killed at the start of a proposed trans-continental flight in California, indicating she may have planned to take her life, were penned weeks ago and were merely letters of a thoughtful person about to go into danger, Mrs. W. M. Elliott said today.

Mrs. Elliott is the mother of Robert Elliott, U. S. N. R., husband of the girl flier.

Mrs. Elliott said that the letters, found in the girl's room, were written by the girl flier before she made a successful flight from Vancouver to California.

"GREAT INJUSTICE"

"We have positive knowledge of that," said Mrs. Elliott, "and a great injustice has been done by inference that Ruth took her own life. She expected to join her husband here at the end of her cross-country flight, and I cannot stress too strongly that statements to the effect the notes were written to indicate suicide are entirely wrong."

Mrs. Elliott said her son left his Brooklyn home last night to attend funeral services for his wife at Irving, Kan.

Mrs. Elliott said her son was heart-broken.

COURT ISSUE SHELVED BY HOOVER

President, Guided by Cuba's Defiance of League, Won't Press Plan on Senate Now

By FRASER EDWARDS.
Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—President Hoover has decided to indefinitely postpone submission of the League Court to the Senate.

He was strengthened in his decision by the spectacle of Cuba kicking over the League of Nations apple cart at Geneva.

Irrespective of the outcome of the row in the League of Nations over Cuba's objections to the revised League Court statutes, it was stated by a responsible authority that the President will not send the court and the Root formula to the Senate at he December session as he once planned to do.

CUBA HAILED

Meanwhile, opponents of the League Court hailed Cuba's action. Senator Clarence C. Dill, of Washington, predicted that the Senate will reject the court outright when the question is submitted for ratification.

In every instance in the party primaries in which the League Court has been made the dominant issue, the pro-court wing has been defeated.

Notable instances were in Colorado, where George H. Shaw, running on an anti-court platform, defeated William V. Hodges for the Republican senatorial nomination, and in Illinois, where Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick won over Senator Deneen, who voted for the court in 1926.

All Republican leaders, from Senator Watson, of Indiana, down along the line, are strongly opposed to the League Court and have served notice on President Hoover they will fight to the last ditch if it is sent to the Senate.

'UNITED STATES SAVED'

Commenting upon the developments at Geneva, Senator Dill, of Washington, said:

"In halting the high-handed purpose of the League of Nations to enforce the League Court protocol without ratification by member nations, Cuba perhaps has saved the United States the embarrassment and worse that would surely result from American adherence to this League of Nations adjunct.

"Cuba's action at Geneva undoubtedly will cause further delay in consideration by the Senate of the so-called Root formula, which was designed to take the United States into the Court without the safeguarding reservations adopted by the Senate in 1926.

"I can see only good resulting from this further postponement. It will give the American people more time to study the League Court and what American adherence to it would mean. And the more they study it, I am sure, the more they will become convinced that the best interests of America lie outside of this Old World scheme to involve the United States in European politics.

"By the time the Hoover administration gets around to submitting the court to the Senate and pressing for action, I am sure that we will have ample votes to reject it and once and for all settle this question for America."

Man, 70, Must Face Trial In 50-Year-Old Killing

TYLER, Tex., Sept. 20.—(AP.)—James Neely, 70-year-old patriarch, must go to trial for a half-century - old murder because chance led him to the community where resides the son of the man he is charged with slaying.

His arrest yesterday on a warrant charging him with the murder of Hiram Cooley, in Alabama, in 1884, was the reward of years of watchful waiting on the part of Cooley's son, A. C. Cooley.

The son had kept careful watch over his neighbor, W. L. Neely, whom he had recognized as the brother of the man charged with his father's murder.

His patience was rewarded when the accused, a resident of Kentucky, came here for a visit. Cooley notified peace officers. Today an officer from Alabama was en route to Tyler to take Neely to the scene of the crime for trial.

Neely told how he and Cooley had engaged in a fist fight after which he struck his adversary in the head with a rock.

Fund Grows for Lipton Cup Rogers Proposed

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—(AP.)—At the suggestion of Will Rogers, Mayor James J. Walker, of New York, was receiving contributions of not more than a dollar apiece today fro the ge[illegible]ic to buy Sir Thomas Lipton a loving cup in tribute to his sportsmanship.

The proposal, made after the final failure of the British sportsman's yacht Shamrock to capture the America's cup, is presented by Rogers in newspapers throughout the country, including the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

Rogers' notion of an inscription was:

"To possibly the world's worst yacht builder but absolutely the world's most cheerful loser. You have been a benefit to mankind, Sir Thomas. You have made losing worth while."

Mayor Walker said that inscription might need some amending, but offered to see that receipts were used to buy a loving cup for Sir Thomas from the American people.

RASKOB'S SON TO WED TYPIST

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Sept. 20.—(Universal.)—Miss Minerva Elaine Aaronson, brilliant young secretarial worker, of this city, last night announced her engagement to wed John J. Raskob, son of the enormously wealthy chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

The differences in religion of the young couple, it is stated, will prove no barrier to their wedding, which is scheduled to take place next spring. Miss Aaronson is of a distinguished Jewish family—her late father was a member of Congress—while young Raskob, like his father, is a Catholic.

Their romance began while young Raskob was a student at the Sheffield Scientific School, of Yale, where he was graduated last June.

A most interesting statement in connection with the young couple's troth is that Mrs. Raskob exhibited to Minerva a jewel box, containing many blazing gems, heirlooms of the Raskob family and invited Miss Aaronson to make a selection for her engagement ring.

EATON GRILLED BY BAKER

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Sept. 20.—(AP.)—Cyrus S. Eaton, Cleveland capitalist, was subjected to a rigid cross examination yesterday on his pronounced opinions that the merger of Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company with Bethlehem Steel Corporation was economically unsound and that an appraisal of the Bethlehem properties should have been made available to Youngstown stockholders.

Recalled by the defense, in the suit brought by his interests to enjoin the merger, Eaton assailed Bethlehem's "poor plant locations" with respect to freight rates and consuming markets.

Newton D. Baker, of defense counsel, was virtually in debate with the witness on what Baker termed the argumentative nature of his views and several times the exchange of questions and answers amounted to a verbal clash.

Baker brought up the old Trumbull Steel-Republican Steel merger, which was negotiated when Eaton was a diretor of both companies.

Cross examination of Eaton will be resumed when court reconvenes Monday.

Andree Log Made Public; Reveals Explorers' Battle to Live

LEFT BASES

The Andree story, only an outline of which has been made public, is a grim, often pathetic, story of men fighting against great odds. Yet, what is astounding, as revealed by the diary, is that Andree, knowing food stores to be within marching distance toward the south, deliberately went east. He seems to have planned an attempt to reach less known territories over drifting ice and thus steered a course away from his bases. Instead of heading southward toward the coast of Spitzbergen, where the expedition had three provision depots, he headed eastward to the north of Franz Josef Land.

According to the Andree diary, wet ice and frost forced the balloon down so that on July 12 and 13, as previously revealed by the Strindberg diary, it repeatedly bumped and dragged on the ice. Through the constant bumping and straining the crew of the Ornen was worn out.

Fresh-water lakes in the ice greatly impeded the march, but with the aid of their canvas boat the men pushed forward. The drift of the ice toward the westward overpowered the three trying to push eastward, forcing the expedition, on August 4, when at a position 82 degrees and 17 minutes north latitude, 29 degrees and 43 minutes east longitude, to give up the plan of going westward and to decide by the help of the ice-drift to the southwest to reach the seven islands on the north coast of Spitzbergen, where they had a food deposit.

SHOOT BEARS

The provisions which they had taken with them from the balloon were far from sufficient. Their fate depended on shooting ice bears or "wandering meat," as Andree picturesquely dubbed them.

All three frequently slipped into lakes on the ice and Fraenkel and Strindberg suffered from dysentery and injured feet. For some time Fraenkel was in a low physical condition. Andree writes, but in spite of their terrific difficulties the three kept in high spirits. Andree remained a scientist to the last filling his notebook with rich technical observations and even gathering specimens of earth, moss, leaves and driftwood found on the ice.

These grim specimens, recovered on White Island by the Hearst-Dagens-Nyheter expedition, are considered by the scientific commission as highly valuable Andree relics. They may help to solve the old problem of the direction of the ice drift over the Arctic from the Siberian coast—a problem which Fridjof Nansen and other great explorers have sought to solve.

WEIRD MENUS

Frankel became quite adept at making "blood pancakes" out of ice bear blood, which they used as a substitute for bread. Strindberg made soup out of sea weeds.

The men decided to hibernate on an ice floe and selected a strong and suitable one. All worked energetically to build an ice hut on the snow.

White Island was sighted September [illegible]. In his diary Andree calls the island "New Iceland," which was the first land sighted by the expedition since its start, July 11.

HUT ON ICE

On September 18 the first seal was shot. The following day two seals and a giant seal were bagged. On September 20 one more bear was shot and Andree notes in his account that the expedition had gathered enough provisions to last it until April. Eight days later they moved into their hut on the ice floe. Christening it "Hem," the Swedish word for "home."

But one morning, either October 2 or 3, they were awakened by a crashing, colliding, smashing sound. Andree saw that the ice floe had split up and that their hut was cracking in two. Various bits of their equipment and stores of their provisions were on the dividing part of the floe and the men worked furiously to rescue their precious stores. In the midst of the catastrophe Andree wrote:

"At the beginning of this story . . ."

These were the last words scrawled by the frozen fingers of the expedition's leader. It is Strindberg, whose diary was found by the Hearst-Dagens-Nyheter expedition, who gives further details of the expedition's fate.

Communique issued by the Swedish government declares that Andree's diary is carefully written and is rich in observations and reflections. It is an extremely remarkable human document and scientific report combined. The contents contain astronomical, meteorological observations, chronometer readings, descriptions of birds, and observations regarding the ice drift.

PASTOR HOME FROM EUROPE

"There is more genuine Christianity in Pittsburgh today than can be found in Jerusalem, Nazareth or Bethlehem."

That is the contention of the Rev. Dr. Percival H. Barker, of the Point Breeze Presbyterian Church, Fifth and Penn avenues today. Dr. Barker has returned from a three months' tour of Palestine, Egypt and Europe. He expressed admiration for the spirit of the modern Zionists. Concerning his observations he said:

"Ecclesiastical bitterness and racial hatred shock the modern traveler as he goes up and down that little country which the western world calls the 'Holy Land.' If the British soldiers were withdrawn from Palestine tomorrow, there would probably not be a live Jew in Jerusalem in 24 hours

"It is my conviction, as I return from my travels through Europe and Africa, that the outlook on the whole is one of hope and that, amid all apparent discouragement, the principles of the Man of Galilee are gaining ground and will ultimately turn all the sordidness of racial hate and religious bigotry into the gold of justice, co-operation and good will."

AUTOS KILL ONE, INJURE SIX

One man was dead, a woman and a boy were seriously hurt, and four other persons were less seriously injured as the result of auto accidents, according to police and morgue reports today.

The dead man was John Joyce, 70, of 110 Ulysses street, who died in his home from injuries suffered September 7, when he was struck by an automobile in West Virginia, according to a morgue report.

Pearl Hahn, 30, of 1801 Howard street, was in the Allegheny Hospital with a possible fracture of the skull and body bruises. Police said she was struck by a machine driven by L. L. Winterhalter, 22, of 3730 East street, at North avenue and East street.

At the Homeopathic Hospital, where Paul J. Beck Jr., 5, of 15 Oakland square, was confined, it was said he also probably has a fractured skull. Morris Leon, 22, of 559 Midland avenue, Wilkinsburg, struck the boy, police said, while driving his car near the Beck home.

John Jillas, 85, of 1934 Buena Vista street, was in his home recovering from a fall at Federal and Ohio streets, which threw him in front of an auto driven by William Canell, 241 First avenue. Canell managed to swerve the machine so as to avoid hitting the man, police said.

Three men were injured when their auto collided with a shifting engine of the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad at the Market street crossing, McKeesport, last night, according to a police report. The injured are in the McKeesport Hospital.

They were Steve Chizmar, 24, of Liberty, driver; Leroy Drubbs, 19, of 1213 Market street, McKeesport, and Victor Cruiz, 18, of 1207 Rose street, McKeesport. W. H. Davidson, of 2809 Fifth avenue, McKeesport, was the locomotive engineer, police said.

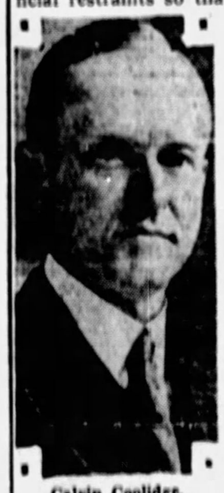
Crusades Against Graft Approved by Coolidge

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Sept. 20.

To the Editor of the Sun-Telegraph:

In the conduct of popular government, in the maintenance of liberty, in releasing the human mind from artificial restraints so that the people may be free to pursue the truth and follow the rule of conscience, a broad spirit of toleration is necessary. This is only another name for a becoming humility. None of us knows all there is to know. While our way may be best for us, some different way may be best for others.



Calvin Coolidge.

In a world of limitations we cannot expect perfection. But we ought not to permit any confusion between toleration and complacency. We have certain legal and social standards that support all progress. They are not easy to maintain. Their value often does not appear to the young and the thoughtless. It may be thought we have a little graft in government and business without much harm. But if an attitude of complacency is adopted toward such conduct it will be but a short time before the whole political and social fabric is corroded by corruption.

The present activity in several localities by both governmental and volunteer agencies in attempts to reform such abuses is a most wholesome spectacle of revolt against complacency.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

Cathie Visits Dam and Sees Gordon Moore

CHAPTER XXIV.

The cold of a winter afternoon settled over them. The fresh mountain air blew through the driver's open window. In the back seat of the blue limousine Cathie drooped in her corner, the heavy robe drawn over her knees.

Farnsworth smoked placidly, occasionally pointing out the landmarks that were little more than dark blurs against the sunset sky. The Cedar Mill. The site of the Dead Cow Mine, closed these many years. Coyote Canyon. Dutchman's Camp. Swede's Hope Mine. A quarry from which rock for the dam had been taken.

"How much longer will it be?" Cathie asked. She had never been so tired.

"Not much farther to go now," Farnsworth answered, indulgently.

Meredith drove steadily, tirelessly, over bumpy mountain roads. Sometimes the car purred up long, unbroken grades. Sometimes they coasted down into canyon places, where they could hear water running somewhere by the side of the road.

They reached their destination shortly after nightfall. It was almost a little town in itself, a little settlement of lighted buildings snuggled in a hollow in the mountains. Houses for the married men. Houses for the engineers. A sort of guest house for visiting officials. A store, a blacksmith shop, garages, machine shops, assay offices, and a great, rambling log building that housed the kitchen and mess hall. And off in the distance the dam, with its glaring electric lights lighting the night shift, its squeaking cars, its pounding machinery, its mystery.

Beckoned by Gordon

Meredith brought the car to a stop before the log building which Farnsworth said was the guest-house. It had a wide veranda, and light, warm and welcoming, streamed from the windows.

"This is where we're going to stay!" he told her, striding ahead, almost forgetting her in his joy at being in the mountains, in the midst of the work he loved.

Meredith gathered up the suitcases. Cathie followed her husband, looking young and out of place as usual, in her smoky blue suit, with the close little hat, and the lovely blue fox fur over her shoulder.

"Halloo! Halloo, there!"

Cathie turned wearily, but she knew who it was, without looking. Gordon Moore. Gordon Moore in a mackinaw and khaki, an old Stetson hat pulled down over his eyes.

"Well, Gordon, my boy. Glad to see you!"

Moore hurried up the driveway, laughing, and waving his hat. "Hello, there, Farnsworth. Glad you brought the missus! How are you, Catherine?"

She tried not to watch him, tried to keep her eyes off the lean brown youngness of his face, off his sturdy, muscular shoulders, and gave up. It wasn't any use. Nothing was any use. She stared, faintly smiling, the bright arc light in front of the house shining full in her face.

Cathie Irritable

"Catherine is very tired," Farnsworth explained. There was a note of apology in his voice.

"Maybe you had better not go down to dinner tonight. I'll have them send you a tray up here," he told her gently, when Moore had gone and they had been shown to their comfortable rooms, in the house.

"No—oh, goodness, no. I'd much rather go to the mess hall with you!" And then, irritably, for Cathie. "You're ALWAYS imagining I'm not well. Heavens! I'm all right!"

A shade of pain passed over Farnsworth's face, but he smiled good humoredly as he said, "It's just because I love you so much. I'm sorry."

Then it was Cathie's turn to be sorry and to try to make up to him for what she was beginning to fear was her lack. So she walked close beside him as they walked to the dining room a little later, her arm in his, her eyes starry with unshed tears.

The messhall was a long room with a huge iron-stove in the middle. Boughs of fragrant pine, relics of Christmas festivities, perhaps, decorated the walls, and jelly glasses filled with sprigs of red berries were on all of the tables. There were no tablecloths. Just the thick white china plates and cups and saucers, and mountains of bread on the brown, weather-beaten boards.

The four Moores waited at the table furthest from the door. The three men, tall, bronzed, aqueline featured, stood. The woman, little and bird-like, with her thin, old face turned a little to one side in a listening attitude, sat in her place at the head of the table.

Cathie met them, found something to say to each, then sank into her place beside her husband, in a sudden agony of shyness.

A Big Meal

"Come sit by me, my dear, David, let Mrs. Farnsworth have your place."

David, a little older than Gordon, a little thinner, a little browner, changed places with Cathie silently. The old man—"Uncle Andrew"—older even than his small, white-haired sister, beamed hospitably across the board. He looked so much like Gordon, a gaunt, weather-beaten caricature of the younger man, that Cathie had an insane desire to laugh. He was the biggest, thinnest, brownest old man she had ever seen in her life. The three gaunt men dominated the table, the old blind sister seemed almost doll-like in her tininess. She put out a little claw-like hand and touched Cathie. "I'm glad you've come," she said, and her sightless blue eyes, beneath their thick lashes, were kind and wise.

Cathie's own eyes filled. She bit her lip.

"Have some bread," said the older Moore brother quickly.

"Yes, Catherine is very tired," she heard her husband telling Gordon, at the other end of the table. But she wasn't tired any more. Just happy and at peace.

Waiters brought heaped up trays of food. Onion soup with grated cheese on top, thick steaks, platters of spaghetti, mountains of mashed potatoes. Dish after dish of vegetables, brimming pitchers of hot coffee, smaller ones of cream. The blind woman and the three Moores ate steadily through the menu, even to the lemon pie and chocolate cake that came last. And to her own surprise, Cathie wasn't far behind.

Alone With Gordon

"I have charge of the commissary," the bird-like Miss Moore told her, with a touch of pride in her old, cracked voice. "We all have the same food—all the workers, too. Now Johnson, the chef, I've had for seven years. . . ."

Cathie listened smilingly, nodding her head in agreement, forgetting the blind woman could not see.

"How would you like to see the dam at night?" old Andrew Moore asked, laying down his fork, and beginning to stuff a big briar pipe with a crooked thumb.

"I really think she's too tired for sight seeing tonight," her husband answered for her, but Cathie cried, "Oh, no! I'm rested now. I feel fine again."

"Of course," said the blind woman, "she's had her dinner."

"Of course," echoed the old man, "and it's a grand sight, the dam at night."

But Miss Moore and her brother walked back to their cottage, and it was Gordon's brother Andrew who drew on Cathie's overshoes and helped her into her fleece-lined leather coat.

Then he, too, melted away in the darkness. Farnsworth was somewhere ahead with one of the young engineers.

Cathie and Gordon Moore were alone.

MANY FILE FOR PARIS TOUR

Gloria Swanson's generous concession in making the age limit 18 years and up for girls who enter the race for the tour to Paris, all expenses paid and everything de luxe, which she is offering through the Sun-Telegraph, resulted in a flood of new nomination blanks today from candidates who had hitherto been ineligible.

It is, however, to be understood that if the winner of the Paris tour is under 21, she must present the written consent of her parents or guardian and a release from all liability on the part of Miss Swanson and the company she represents in this offer.

Miss Swanson's decision to change the age limit on the Paris tour automatically changes the age limit for candidates who want to win one of the five tours to Bermuda. Girls 18 and up are now eligible for the Bermuda trips.

So girls, if you want to be the guest of Miss Swanson enroute and in Paris or the guest of the Sun-Telegraph for a week of glorious Bermuda send in your nomination blank today.

It is because Miss Swanson takes so much pride in her new picture, "What A Widow!", that she is inviting a Pittsburgh girl to be her guest on the Paris tour. Nearly all of the new picture was filmed in Paris and on the French liner Paris. The picture comes to Loew's Penn Theater next Friday.

DIVERSIFIED FABRICS FOSTER INDIVIDUALITY IN NEW MODE

Sketched in Paris

Paris Bureau, Pgh. Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, Sept. 20—Pressed fabrics are being pressed into service and used for some impressive coats. Quite lately we have come across some pressed faille and also velvet, a steady favorite with some women. Faille is still important, being used for dresses, frocks and suits, ensembles and coats. It is an interesting compromise between in pressed crisp fabrics and soft ones, and has body and substance. This season is noteworthy for its diversity of materials available, making many fabrics fashionable so that things are ever so much easier for the woman who cares to follow her inclination as to the selection of materials for her clothes.

AFTERNOON COATS are certainly rather clinging affairs this season, with the clinging propensities manifest at the region of the waistline. Usually the fitted coat has a flare, albeit not a very pronounced one at the hemline, thus achieving an excellent silhouette. The fur must be flying in the workrooms, for seldom have coats and wraps received such lavish attention in the fur trimming line. Huge collars, extravagent cuffs and deep borders of the most costly furs are to the fore in afternoon coats, while morning or informal coats are effectively trimmed with astrakan, beaver and other flat pelts.

THE SPIRAL LINE seems to be climbing in popular favor, for many dresses are now featuring it. It is an important detail of the emerald green velvet frock from Lucile Paray which is shown here. The spiral line in this case is to be found in the circular flounce. The short sleeves are cut in a piece with the bodice yoke which is draped up beneath the bow at one shoulder. With the frock is worn a green broadcloth coat trimmed with astrakan.

THE COAT is from Maggy Rouff, who is presenting several models in pressed fabrics such as the coat sketched. The material is black faille with a waffle-like pressed pattern of a vague leaf design. The silhouette clings to the figure at the waistline and hips and has a slight flare at the lower edge. Two silver fox skins are used for the important collar and are crossed in front. Bands of fox encircle the close-fitting sleeve at each elbow.

CRITICS VIEW FILMS; HOLLYWOOD AND BROADWAY NEWS

SIDE WALKS of PITTSBURGH

by WILLIAM PFARR

Without fear of contradiction or libel we dare to assert that Maurice A Nernberg is a forger. When he was in school and wont to play hookey he would the next day write a polite explanation of his absence and sign his mother's name. The teacher could never detect the forgery in the signature because Maurice Nernberg today is a handwriting expert.

"I believe I am the best forger in the country," Nernberg boasts. Needless to say he doesn't work at it.

He does work at it in a sense. It's his business. He examines signatures professionally and decides whether they're genuine. In legal disputes of wills and judgment notes he is a frequent witness. Before this he taught penmanship in schools.

Nernberg insists that handwriting is not something to be learned in a minute, but after an hour's talk we adopted the negative. To our contention that one simply had to study the slopes, the curves or whatever characteristics he had for destructive refutation.

A lawyer, too, Nernberg admits frankly that his business is more concerned with detecting forged signatures. It is for one thing more interesting. Too, the fees are substantial—the minimum $100.

"Why," we asked, startled, "if I brought you two copies of my signature in here and merely asked you to determine whether they were genuine, you'd charge me $100?"

"Well," he answered, "I'd try to."

Nernberg recalls a society woman who came into his office and asked him to determine the genuineness of signatures on certain slanderous letters which she herself had been accused of writing. When she returned he handed her a bill and told her she had really written the letters. She paid the bill and without argument, departed.

On another occasion a married man in a nearby town brought Nernberg anonymous slandering letters and asked him to determine the identity of the authors. Nernberg requested samples of the handwriting of the client's two-dozen friends. After examining these specimens Nernberg pointed to one as the author.

"Why, that's my wife's," the client protested. "I just put hers in as a test on you. I don't believe it."

A few days later the wife admitted the slander to Nernberg.

Nernberg, incidentally, usually refuses blackmail cases, for obvious reasons.

Regarding himself quite rightly as an outstanding handwriting expert, Nernberg refuses to concede that such experts are much like alienists. One alienist, you know, will testify that the defendant is as insane as could be, while another will say he is as sane as the President. Nernberg won't concede there is such a division of handwriting experts.

Anyhow, we know a story of Nernberg which is apart from his business. In Atlantic City he was attracted to a gypsy camp which offered to tell the customer's name for 50 cents.

"Where were you born?" the gypsy lady asked Nernberg.

"Ah," answered Nernberg, "don't ask me questions. Answer them."

A quartet of gypsies handed him his 50 cents and tossed him out.

George O'Brien Escapes Western Role Under New Contract

By HARRISON CARROLL

(Copyright, 1930, by Premier Syndicate.)

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 20.

A temporary vacation from Westerns is awarded to George O'Brien in his first picture under a lucrative new contract at Fox.

The star will play the lead in "The Seas Beneath," a submarine picture by Dudley Nichols and William Collier, Sr. John Ford, as heretofore printed in this column, will direct.

By coincidence it was Ford who gave George his first chance in the movies. That was six years ago in "The Iron Horse." Since then the young actor has been associated chiefly with Western stories. He has just finished a series of three at Fox and presumably will do more action.

George O'Brien

Warren Hymer, who impressed in Ford's other submarine picture, "Men Without Women," is to have an important part in "The Seas Beneath."

WAIL FROM COLLEEN

A wire from Colleen Moore reads:

"Never worked so hard in my life. If I live, I will open in Albany October 23."

The star's play, "On the Loose," is by Barney Glazer, prolific writer of these parts. Colleen will tour for four weeks before crashing Broadway. In this time she hopes to get used to audiences. Personal appearances have been a nightmare to her from the first. Feeling as she does, it takes a lot of courage to go behind the footlights.

While in New York, Colleen is living in a suite at the Plaza. Her brother, Cleve Moore, and Virginia Valli are with her. In the meanwhile the star's home, which is a showplace even for the film colony, remains vacant.

VOTE PLANNED

The Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences will start balloting this week to determine the outstanding motion picture achievements in the year ending July 31.

Norma Shearer

Pictures on the final ballot will be "All Quiet on the Western Front," "The Big House," "Disraeli," "The Divorcee" and "The Love Parade."

The five choice performances by actors will be: George Arliss in "Disraeli," Wallace Beery in "The Big House," Maurice Chevalier in "The Love Parade," Ronald Colman in "Bulldog Drummond" and Lawrence Tibbett in "The Rogue Song."

The performances by actresses are Nancy Carroll in "The Devil's Holiday," Ruth Chatterton in "Sarah and Son," Greta Garbo in "Anna Christie," Norma Shearer in "The Divorcee" and Gloria Swanson in "The Trespasser."

Awards will be made to the winners in the vote.

JOLSON IN 'BIG BOY' IS ENRIGHT FEATURE

By HOWARD L. BROWNING, JR.

Al Jolson is Al Jolson at the Enright this week. If you've seen him, this won't surprise you. The plot of "Big Boy" is nothing—it's all in the black-face comedy.

"Big Boy" is about a Kentucky horse in a fixed race. Big Boy is a horse, belonging to the Bedford Stables. It ought to win. But the high-living son of the family has passed a bad check, and that's used to dismount Jolson as jockey and put on a crooked rider.

Well, the plot, of course, is discovered in time and Al rides Big Boy out of holes to break the tape. Meanwhile is much song and dance, with Jolson, Jolson and more Jolson. And cracks.

The audience doesn't fall into the aisles as it might. The picture gets a medium reception as just another film, whose only excuse is that it brings Jolson into action. A good song is "Hurray for You, Hurray for Me." And, of course, the usual spirituals and plantation songs, in a flash-back to Jolson's grandfather, who, somehow or other, looks very much like Jolson's grandfather's grandson.

The stage show, a "Revue in Blue," is peppy and entertaining. Val and Ernie Stanton supply no end of amusement, with the Three Katts doing some unusual and difficult dances. The return of Milton Slosser, singing organist, gets "a big hand" and better-than-usual audience singing from the crowd.

CANNIBALS AND SUCH ON SHERIDAN SCREEN

By BARBARA WILBERT

"The Sea God," featuring Fay Wray and Richard Arlen is true to its title, a story of the sea. It portrays roughness in character, in speech and in action, with the exception of the scenes in which Miss Wray appears. The conflict is contained in the hate and jealousy of two seafaring men and in rivalry for the love of Miss Wray. There are some very tense moments in the picture, but there also are many moments in which action fairly drags. Some humor is furnished by Eugene Pallette.

The unkempt appearance of the crew does not lend any "beauty" to the "South Sea island" setting. Arlen is the one strong character in the picture, which has to do with pearls and adventure, with some South Seas cannibals as part of the background.

Local Song Writers' Lyrics for Stanley

Paul F. Koerner, Pittsburgh song writer, says he is "getting a break in the old home town," as Bernie Armstrong, organist in the Stanley, will feature his series of lyrics, using one weekly. Koerner, native of the First Ward, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Koerner, of 1616 Edna street, former newsboy, who was editor of the Newsboys' Magazine for a time, has written numerous song poems. Three recently accepted for publication by the Radio Music Company of New York are "Find Yourself a Rainbow," "Old-Fashioned Sweetheart of Mine" and "Radio Mamma."

$50,000 Asked in Suit Over Auto Injuries

Mrs. Annie Higgins, of East Liberty, in a suit filed in Common Pleas Court, joined in by her husband, John Higgins, asked $50,000 damages from W. J. McAteer, of Wilkinsburg. Mrs. Higgins suffered a fracture of the hip and other serious injuries when she was struck by McAteer's automobile while attempting to cross Penn avenue at Denniston avenue August 31 last, the suit said.

Queries

Ever so often I think of you—
What are you doing to pass the days?
Who's your captain and who's your crew—
Are you still possessed of enchanting ways?
How were the lads who followed me—
Were their phrases soft—were their kisses sweet?
And did they waken an ecstasy—
And was it lasting or was it fleet?

Do you still possess that delicious drawl—
Does your phone still ring as it did of yore?
And now that Summer has swung to Fall—
Do you bid good-night at your little door?
Do you still affect that indifferent pose—
Which trips a lad—be he dull or clever?
And one more question before I close—
Are you still—are you still as drab as ever?

The Squelch Terrible

Gone are the good old days when Arthur Caesar and Julius Tannen, fast thinkers, engaged in verbal wars to the delight of the locals. Caesar now is in Hollywood, where Tannen observes:

"The California people think it is radio static when it is only Caesar talking."

There was the time in a restaurant when Tannen ankled in and Caesar cried:

"Shall we have a battle of wits?"

"Wait," snapped Tannen, "till I check my brains—so we can start even!"

And This!

When Tannen was master of ceremonies in one of Earl Carroll's "Vanities," he also officiated at Mr. Carroll's Sabbath night concerts, which usually were dull entertainments made up of second and third rate actors.

On one Sunday evening, when the bill was unusually poor, a tough guy in the gallery started to kid Tannen.

"Say, Julius!" yelled the heckler, "tell me something. Is dis amachoor night?"

When the laughter subsided, Tannen replied:

"Yes. Do you want to go on?"

Gag

Loney Haskell had an arm shattered in two places after a cab crash the other week-end. He told the story of the accident in the Friars Club to Jack Lait and other listeners.

"My arm was broken twice," concluded Loney, "but my watch wasn't!"

To which Lait chirped:

"You should have bought your arm where you bought your watch!"

Haw!

Claude (Variety) Binyon overheard the most caustic of the sarcasms in Hah-hah-hahlywood. It follows:

"I saw all your friends riding in a baby Austin car which also contained two bass drums!"

A Form of Criticism

One of the dramatic critics, whose daily assignment incudes the preparing of a column of Broadway night life, was asked by a show producer:

"When on earth do you get your sleep?"

"At the first nights," was the reply.

Add Double Negatives

Far be it from us to Rudy-vallee our contempt-orary, Mark (my words!) Hellinger, but when we are the victim of sour proof-reading (Mr. H.'s "monkies" was hardly a typographical error) it should be remembered that we do not know any better, anyway. We were expelled from P. S. 184 (from 6B) for being a dunce.

But Ah-ha! Gladys Glad's husband is a high-schooled boy! Oh, it is no sin to be a pediculous speller. Washington, Benaparte and other Greats couldn't spell.

And while it is the height of something or other for us to find flaws in anybody's English, get a load of this reverse English from a recent Hellinger "Unsung Hero" dep't:

"She said she wanted $50,000 in a lump sum and would NOT ask for NO alimony."

The score is now 4 to 2.

Imagine!

Stories such as this one make it less difficult to believe what you hear about the Hollywood movie impresarios. One of the newspaper game's intellects recently shelved the profession for movieland because of the heavier wage.

After three weeks of idleness (at pay!) he was finally given Wasserman's two-volume tome, "The World's Illusion," to read. He stayed up for four nights and read it. When he finished, he went to his superior officer.

"What sort of a picture do you want me to make out of it?" he asked.

"We ain't making no picture of it," was the reply; "we just wanted you to read a little."

The Morning Mail

"Dear Walter," writes the comical Izzy Elinson, "I know who started it. The guy who designed the night club dance floor wanted to do something big. So he invented the Tom Thumb golf course, which is a big hit with the Broadway mob. To one just off a night club postage stamp-size dance floor a junior golf course looks like the wide open spaces!"

"Aw!" as someone has already said, "go sit on a Tom Thumb tack!"

Joan Crawford Grows Up

1. "Our Dancing Daughters."
2. "Our Modern Maidens."
3. "Our Blushing Brides."

And the next, "Our Dizzy Divorcees"?

Nifty

When those nude adagio dancers appeared at the opening performance of "Vanities" a few months ago, and "Artists and Models" also featured a similar duo in their undersea ballet, some of us who would rather wisecrack than eat tried hard to think up a quip about the undersea ballets in which all the gels appeared peeled—in the raw.

It remained for Ashton Stevens, critic for the Chicago Hurld-Exam, to supply the appropriate gag. In reviewing the "Artists and Models" troupe in Chicago, Stevens wised: "20,000 Legs Under the Sea!"

One Good Reason

A local department store has asked several citizens to explain what makes New York great? A contemporary facetiously retorts: "One hour in any other town!"

A better and saner answer, we think, was recently reported by Beverly Smith, who told about John Kalogeras, the Greek shoe shine man of Fortieth street. John, it appears, held forth for an hour on the mellow glories of his home in the Isle of Chios. He painted an idyl.

"Why in heaven's name," asked Smith, "don't you go there?"

"Because," replied John, "you can buy things in New York so late at night."

NANCY AND BUDDY ARE 'CUTE AND GRAND' IN 'FOLLOW THRU'

By GEORGE SEIBEL

EVERY TIME the angelic face of Nancy Carroll smiled from the screen, an admiring girl in the row front gushed: "Ain't she cute?" And every time the soulful eyes of Buddy Rogers flashed across, another charmed charmer one row to the north whispered: "Ain't he grand?" So we'll just make it unanimous.

George Seibel

This pretty pair perform the trying feat of being "cute and grand" in the screen version of the golf musical comedy "Follow Thru," which was very amusing when Schwab and Mandel put it on. A good deal of the amusement has been kept in the Technicolor version at the Penn, chiefly because Jack Haley with the eyes that won't behave has been persuaded to "follow thru" and some of the tunes are very catchy.

PUTTING TECHNIQUE

The cute Nancy plays the part of the golf girl who can't keep her eye on the ball when the expert instructor is being played by the grand Buddy. They really make love most adorably, pout and smile, bill and coo, while the moonlight pours romance over the realism of their complexions reproduced by Technicolor.

Zelma O'Neal and Thelma Todd add more merriment and romance. The songs are "You Belong to Me," "I Want to Be Bad," and "We'd Make a Peach of a Pair," and they are pleasing. The great spectacle is a fire ballet, put out by Cupid's hose-carriage—but these sensational exhibitions are becoming like Lot's wife, they've lost their freshness.

A GREAT STAGE SHOW

The stage show this week is great, for Cy Landry is a clown as funny when he dances as are the new jokes he has accumulated. His definitions of a "parasite" and of a "religious cook" are essential to a complete education.

Then there are the Ghezzis, marvelous acrobats, and Bert Frohman as master of ceremonies with some good songs. Wild Oscar was as amusing and infectious as always, David Pesetzki and his orchestra played Wagner's "Rienzi" overture with Wagnerian elan, and Senator Wheeler evoked loud applause when he told from the news reel why he is now for the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment.

PICTURE IN WARNER SHOWS SOME MORE COURTROOM

By CLARENCE E. GRUNDISH

"Scarlet Pages" is the new picture in the Warner. It is one long courtroom scene, with night club atmosphere at the beginning and a double dose of wedding bells at the end.

A little cabaret gal kills the man she thinks is her father, a district attorney prosecutes her and a woman attorney defends her.

SECRET IS OUT

Motive for the murder? Well, allusions are made that he was anything but a decent fellow. Sure, the girl wins an acquittal and meets her real mother—none other than the lady attorney. We tell you this because as soon as the picture begins the secret is out anyway.

Elsie Ferguson, once prominent on the stage and screen, portrays the attorney-mother. John Halliday is the prosecuting lawyer. Both handle their parts well. Marian Nixon is the girl who does the killing. She weeps a lot and affects a hardboiled manner that is unbecoming and unconvincing. Grant Withers is present as her boy friend. He'se no worse and no better an actor than before.

NO SENSATION!

"Scarlet Pages" is melodramatic enough. It has some comedy and, at times, gets sloppy with sentiment. But its far from gripping. And it is not sensational.

Of course, 'tis not children's entertainment. But it isn't such adult entertainment either!

'ANIMAL CRACKERS' CONTINUES IN ALDINE

The Four Marx Brothers are to be seen in the Aldine for a second week in a film version of their stage success, "Animal Crackers." The picture is a riot of laughter. The plot has to do with a big game hunter, just returned from Africa, who is guest of honor at a society party. And the goofy talk and goofy antics of the Marx boys make the party, as well as the picture, a howling success.

Gene Dennis, mind reader, continues to answer questions from the stage.

Camera Question Box

The Sun-Telegraph's "Camera Question Box" each day will ask a question of public interest to Pittsburghers and will photograph those interviewed.

Today's Question: Why do so many American citizens neglect to vote?

Nathan Carnig

NATHAN J. CARNIG, Herron Hill, salesman. Personally, I believe so many American citizens neglect to vote, because of the corruption in politics. I think it is a result of the public's disgust.

Mrs. Pentecost

MRS. R. PENTECOST, Perrysville. I think most people are too lazy to vote. This is especially true of some of our women. If they think they have to get up early in the morning to go to the polls, they would rather neglect to vote.

Miss Rodrian

SARAH RODRIAN, Brookline, clerk. A good many good American citizens keep putting off going to vote from time to time until it becomes a habit with them. As far as I can see, it is pure neglect.

Mrs. Du Val

MRS. CLARENCE DU VAL, visitor, New York. I think that the reason many citizens neglect to vote is that they are indolent and do not realize the responsibility of the vote.

C. D. Ritchey

C. D. RITCHEY, North Side, salesman. I think different things turn up in politics, especially in Pennsylvania, that make a person neglect to vote. There is too much partiality shown in politics.

W. F. Cherilla

W. F. CHERILLA, East End, Tailor. Many Americans neglect to vote because they're not so sure whom they are voting for. The politicians handle the voting to suit themselves.

Will Rogers Says:

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal., Sept. 20.

To the Editor of the Sun-Telegraph:

We used to have a rule that our government wouldn't recognize any new government that had come into power by force and revolution. Then somebody that had accidentally read our history happened to ask, "Well, how did our government come in power?" So now we recognize 'em no matter who they shot to get in.

Recently we took in Argentine, Bolivia and Peru. All you have to promise is that you will buy something from us, even if it's only guns for the next revolution.

If Russians will just shave, and buy some tractors, we will recognize them.

There is no such thing as a thief any more, as long as he can pay his way. Yours,

WILL.

MISS HARD-BOILED

By JANE DIXON

CHAPTER LVIII.

"I have known Jerry Parker exactly seven days."

Greta, stretched at length on a chaise lounge, turned to regard Raquel with quizzical eye.

"Gosh, dearie!" she said, "don't breathe it; say it."

Raquel laughed. A low laugh, deep in her throat.

Looking back over the week that had just passed, she was certain she had found more happiness than she had known in all the rest of her troubled life. Happiness and exquisite pain.

What was there about Jerry Parker that throbbed in her veins like a fever? That sang in her soul—like the music that first time she went to the opera in Paris?

He was no different than the men she had known. Not as handsome as Bertie Adams or Jack Farrell. Certainly he was without the graceful gallantry, the unfailing thoughtfulness, finesse, of Alphonse. Beauty awakened only mild interest, certainly no fine fervor in him.

Yet there was something about him. The slow turn of his head when he looked at her. The set of his chin when he had reached a decision. The way his gray eyes smiled when his lips were grave. The touch of his hand on her arm. Firm, yet infinitely gentle.

"It's a good thing I know you're off love, dearie," Greta said, balancing a silver brocade mule on bare toes, "or I'd say you're falling for Jerry."

Jerry Indifferent

"Yes, isn't it?" Raquel's voice lacked conviction. "Otherwise I might suffer a fractured heart."

"Uh-huh. I don't think Jerry's falling in love this season. There's one bimbo you didn't knock dizzy, dearie."

"He likes to play at love, though."

"Sure. It helps him kill time. Nize playboy!"

Raquel walked to her dressing-table. Dusted her face with powder. Dusted the powder off again. Her hand was trembling.

"Alphone arrives tomorrow," she said.

"I hope he doesn't crab the party. We're having a wow of a time. I got three luscious evening bags stuffed full of francs, nice fat francs. Croupiers weep when they see me coming."

"Do start dressing, will you, Greta? We're to meet Jerry and Mr. Watrous in the plage for aperitifs."

"Why Jerry and Mr. Watrous? Bryce is a good egg."

"Of course he is. But I seem to know Jerry better. Just as if I had known him always."

"Put on the 'Hearts and Flowers' record, James," mocked Greta, disengaging herself lazily from the cushions.

They were motoring out of Deauville for dinner. There was a place nestled back in the hills, with a rustic garden, and food as only the rustic French can cook it.

Speak of Beauty

The moon came up early, silvering the paths in the garden, on the top of a hill. Stardust sifted down upon their heads. There was the scented night-breath of flowers.

"A night for love—and lovers," said Jerry. He was strolling with Raquel down a silver-pebbled path toward an arbor.

"And beauty," she said, softly. Her heart stood still.

"I suppose so," he said. "Beauty in nature, at any rate. After all, nothing is beautiful unless it is natural, simple."

"Unless, perhaps, a beautiful woman?"

"Even that," he said. "I came near falling in love myself once. It was a long time ago. While I was in college. The fellows said she—the girl—was homely enough to stop the clock on chapel tour. I could never see it. I liked her simplicity."

Blue-white teeth gleaming through scarlet lips.

"That is — well — rather unusual, for a man, isn't it?"

Raquel tossed her head, around which the summer breeze blew her hair in a sable smoke-cloud.

"I don't know," said Jerry. "At any rate, you need not consider the question. You have both. Beauty and simplicity."

She thought of the French maid. Jars and bottles and tubes and boxes. Dozens of them. Row upon row of gowns, cloaks, hats. Dainty underthings by the dozen. Shoes—a forest of them.

Nevertheless her heart beat a joyous roundelay.

Thwarted Desire

They were under the arbor now. Pale puffs of sweetness that were roses. The heady perfume of honeysuckle.

She came close to him. So that the sable cloud of her hair touched his cheek. She reached up to plunder one of the pale rose puffs, steadying herself against him as she stood on tiptoe.

The need of his arms around her!

The thirst of his lips against hers, warm, clinging, into an eternity of time!

"Let me try it," he said. Was there the merest suspicion of unsteadiness, of huskiness, in his voice?

No. Imagination. He handed her the rose with what she thought was a burlesque of a gallant flourish.

Raquel accepted the cluster of roses with a mixed feeling of wonder and thwarted desire. Conquest had previously been so easy that the possibility of failure had never occurred to her. To keep men at a distance, to escape their reaching, grasping hands—that had often required quick action and quicker wit. Now, when she yearned for the touch of this man's hands, when she would have melted into his arms, they were denied her.

"Come," she said, turning her head so that she would not see that peculiar tilt of Jerry's chin that set her fingers tingling with the want to straighten it. "Let's go back to the others."

Resentment Vanishes

The stars no longer sifted silver over their heads. The paths were uncomfortably paved with metallic pebbles. Her shoes crunching against them set her teeth on edge.

So hurried was her flight along the paths that Jerry found it difficult to keep pace with her.

"Raquel," he said, stopping her before they came into the circle of light cast by an ancient mariner's lantern hung over a door. "What's the rush? Have I offended you in some way?"

Instantly all her resentment against him, all the sting of her wounded vanity, was gone.

How like a boy he was, this man with the grave lips and the misty eyes. He was steel and velvet.

A moment ago, back there under the arbor, he was steel. She could sense the tautness of him, as if she had rested against a steel girder. Now he was velvet, rubbing softly against her cheek.

"Of course not, silly," she said. And prevaricated with: "I just thought it was getting damp in the garden."

"Why can't I treat him like I have other men?" she asked herself, keeping up a polite fiction of nonsense with Greta and Watrous. "I've been hard. There's a streak of cruelty in me with men. And they've loved me. Wanted me. With him I am melted wax. He knows it. He would laugh at me, if he were not so bored by my flinging myself at him."

A Teacher's Noble Calling Second Only to Mother Love, Says Fay King

By FAY KING

Countless little children are taking their first step out into the world.

From the shelter of their homes they have entered the wider sphere of the school room.

What mothers have accomplished in rearing their little ones to school age, the teachers now take in hand.

Those women who enter into the noble profession of teaching and guiding young minds into the highways of knowledge deserve to share the honor we bestow on mothers.

No career outside of the home is more worthy.

Even children who dislike school will one day bless those days, however brief. For school is the gateway to opportunity, and the key of school books will open doors of happy research in every direction later on.

Love's Reawakening

Continuation of Loves Awakening

By ADELE GARRISON

The Early Travelers Prepare for Speedy Get-Away

Mary must have been standing just inside our door, listening for my return, for she swung the door open noiselessly at my first light tap. When she had drawn me in and closed it again, she faced me, her face and eyes animated question marks.

"Well," she whispered and began to look worried as I sat down without speaking.

"Has something gone wrong?" she asked next.

"No," I replied, after a second. "The Hasbroucks are wonderful, are arranging everything for us to get out." Hastily I recounted what our host and hostess were planning, but added soberly: "It all depends upon Mrs. Underwood. If she isn't able to go——"

"Remember what Mrs. Thier always tells Katie," Mary interposed with an engaging impertinence that was like a tonic. "Don't cross your bridges till you get to them. You know how quickly Mrs. Underwood comes back from any illness, she's almost as wonderful as you are that way, and—you don't need to say anything to her until it's time to get up, do you?"

"No, I don't," I returned, adding under my breath, "I couldn't anyway," for I knew that the sedative I had given to Lillian upon her return from her nerve-racking last visit to Rovert Savarin would keep her soundly asleep for several hours.

"Then I suppose we'd better get to bed right away. What time are you going to get up?"

"Three o'clock. Mrs. Hasbrouck will have breakfast at half past three and we start at four. That's the general schedule. I'll let you pack the bags while I help Mrs. Underwood get ready. We can manage it in half an hour, I'm sure."

"Of course, loads of time," she agreed. "But how are you going to wake up?"

I showed her the cord which Mrs. Hasbrouck had given me and explained what she had told me to do. Mary flung herself on the bed, stuffed a corner of the pillow into her mouth and shook with laughter. I was smiling myself when she came up for air.

"Oh, oh!" she gurgled, "that's the biggest scream I've ever heard. I'd have shrieked enough to wake the dead instead of that extremely live gentleman down the hall, if I hadn't dived into the pillows. Come on, Auntie Madge, be a sport, let me tie it around my wrist, too. If I wasn't afraid the old girl down stairs would jerk too hard, I'd put it around my big toe. I've always wanted to pull a stunt of that sort ever since I read 'Tom Sawyer' and 'Huckleberry Finn'."

I smiled at her enthusiasm with a little tug at my heart. To be her age again with her joy of life!

"I'll tell you a secret, Mary," I said. "I always had a yearning to be wakened that way, too."

"Then you ought to get a big kick out of it tomorrow morning," she grinned.

But I could have told her there would be no such awakening for me. I tied the cord around my wrist as Mrs. Hasbrouck had directed, found another one which Mary fastened upon her own wrist and we dropped the two cords through the radiator. But I awakened a good half hour before three, and was unable to go to sleep again. I untied the cord from my wrist, but mindful of Mary's wish, I did not drop it down to the floor below, but drew it up, leaving the cord on the girl's wrist still dangling. Then I dressed noiselessly, shading the light so that Mary would not awaken. When I heard Mrs. Hasbrouck come into the room below, I moved over to Mary's side, my hand held close to her lips that I might stifle any exclamation she might make at the tug upon her wrist.

But I might have spared my precaution. I could see the cord tauten, then relax, as Mrs. Hasbrouck gave successive tugs upon it. Mary stirred and brushed at her wrist.

"Hush!" I whispered. "Take hold of the cord and pull it, to show her you're awake. Then untie it and drop the cord through the grating."

She obeyed me and then sprang out of bed with a gamin grin at me.

"I got my kick, all right," she said. "I thought she'd yank my hand off with that last one. What's eating the old girl, anyway?"

"She had been trying to waken you for several seconds," I told her. "Now that you're up, I'll turn over everything in this room to you. I am all ready except my hat and coat, and my things are all in my bag. Now I'm going in to see Mrs. Underwood."

The door between our rooms had been left partly ajar. I pushed it farther open, walked over to the bed where Lillian lay and put my hand on her shoulder. She did not waken at first, and I had to shake her gently several times before her eyes opened. As she saw me bending over her, her eyes were suddenly terrified.

"What is it?" she whispered. "Has—Robert—gone?"

Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

When the breasts are not developed, the cause may be in a defective glandular system. If it isn't, development can be achieved by rubbing gently with alcohol, applying cocoabutter and letting it remain on over night. Every morning turn the cold spray on neck and chest. Don't chill the hands. All exercises that move the arms are helpful.

Brush the teeth after each meal. In a few hours food caught between the teeth can start up a state of fermentation, producing fluids that are destructive to the dentine and injurious to the gums.

Tapping white of egg into the complexion is a treatment that acts as an astringent, tightening the skin and closing enlarged pores.

The Marry-Go-Round

By HELEN ROWLAND.

Love—and Infatuation

How long, O my Daughter, wilt thou continue to confuse Infatuation with True Love, and to harken unto men's "Oh-promise-me's?"

For the one is unto the other as star-dust, which dazzleth the eyes; unto starlight, which cleareth the vision and maketh all things radiant.

And by these signs shalt thou know them:

* * *

Lo, love cometh with reverence and burnt offerings, as a knight on bended knee; but infatuation cometh as a caveman with a club.

Love saith, "Love me—or I will make THEE suffer!"

* * *

Love is the homing instinct of the heart—infatuation is the hunting instinct of the imagination and the curiosity.

Love saith hopefully, "I'll win thee!" Infatuation saith boastfully, "I'll GET thee!"

Love seeth with the mind and glorifieth the Beloved; infatuation seeth with the eyes, through rose-colored glasses, dimly.

* * *

Love saith, "Thou hast conquered me!" Infatuation saith, "I will conquer THEE!"

* * *

Love kindleth the aspiration; infatuation wrecketh the appetite, the sleep, the ambition—and sometimes the purse and the conscience.

Infatuation saith, "I love thee NOW!" Love saith, "I will love thee tomorrow—and tomorrow—and tomorrow—forever!"

* * *

Love trusteth, believeth and forgiveth; infatuation feareth, doubteth, suspecteth—and naggeth.

Love sacrificeth all things; infatuation demandeth all things!

Infatuation is a "dope" which goeth to the head, deceiveth the senses and bringeth dazzling dreams, love is a tonic which stimulateth the heart, stireth the pulses and steadieth the spirit.

Love humbleth the egotism and maketh faint the courage; but infatuation feedeth the vanity and inflateth the "nerve."

Verily, verily, infatuation is a temporary state of being "in love"—but love is the extreme sentence; and, once in, thou art "in for life!"

* * *

Therefore, do the gods smile upon love. But when they behold infatuation they know not whether to weep or to laugh out loud.

* * *

For the beginning thereof is glamor and headiness, but the end thereof is weariness and ennui and dead sea fruit.

CORRECT MANNERS

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

A Gracious, Simple Reply

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me what reply you should make to folks when they tell you they are pleased to have made your acquaintance? ADELE.

Put into words, simply and graciously, your own pleasure at the meeting. If you are not especially interested in the introduction—that is, if it is a casual and incidental one—you may, to this statement, simply bow and say, "Thank you." If you wish to be more friendly and really are pleased at the meeting, say, "Thank you. I am also most happy to meet you." And if you wish, you may add, "Eleanor has told me so many delightful things about you that it is splendid to know you at last."

If the Lady Travels by Car

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1—When a lady is visiting at a home in the afternoon or evening, should a man put her on the car?

2—If so, should he also pay her fare? If either is correct which is most generally used? THANK YOU.

1—It is polite for him to do so.

2—Not necessarily. But most men try to hand the fare to the conductor as unobtrusively as possible while he is assisting the lady into the car. He must be very busy and deft at the same time!

A Correct Pronunciation

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

What is the correct way to pronounce "Mrs."? It seems to be different in this part of the country. P. W.

"Mrs." should be pronounced "mis-is." The accent is on the first syllable. The "i" in both syllable is a short "i," as in "admit."

Household Hints

Table linen should always be hemmed by hand. Handwork means a neater, more dainty job and there is never a streak of dirt under the edge after laundering as so often happens when the linen is stitched by machine.

One of the most useful articles in a sewing basket is a six-inch rule. For measuring hems it is much better than a tape line and it does not stretch. The cost is trifling.

TELL IT TO SALLY

By SALLY MARTIN

Are You One of Those Working Wives Whose Husband Uses Her for a Doormat?

Does a Working Wife wreck her husband's morale?

June says she does. Why does she think so? Bill's why.

Eight years ago, when June married him, he looked to her like the Answer to a Maiden's Prayer, and her heart thrilled to dreams of a sweet, shining home, with bright curtains at the windows, and babies tumbling in the sunshine.

But that was soon over. For the wedding bells had scarcely ceased ringing, when Bill "took sick" . . . and, like the good soldier she was, June stepped out and put her slender shoulder to the wheel . . . and it's still there.

Bill got well, to be sure . . . even went back on the job . . . half-heartedly. June, in the meantime, being a smart girl, worked up till she gets more money than he does. And now he expects her to pay the rent and the grocery bill, and even buy him a car. Also, just lately, he's decided he's "tired of working" and threatens to quit, any day.

Why does she stand for this poison pill? I dunno, Alice. Maybe you can tell me. Here's the story. Read it for yourself.

"Dear Miss Martin—I have read your column every day in hopes someone would come to you with a problem like mine, but I haven't seen any, so I am coming myself. I do hope you can help me, because I'm pretty near the end of my rope.

"First off, I want to say that I don't believe in a woman working after she is married. Why? My own bitter experience is why.

"When I married, I was deeply in love and wanted a nice little home and babies. But that dream didn't last long. Only a few months after I did marry, Bill took sick and I was forced to go back to work. I thought I would be able to quit when he got well, but I've been at it ever since, and I guess I always will be.

"Bill got work again, but he just doesn't seem to have much ambition. Without what I made we would have been in want. So I kept on. And now I have worked up in my job till I get more than he does. And he seems to think that I owe him a living. The other day he actually came home with a car and said to me: I have paid the deposit on it, and I must have the money to pay the balance or I will lose it and the car too.

"Well, I raved a while, but I had some money saved, so finally I gave it to him. And honestly, that is all I have done ever since I went to work!

"I cook, wash, clean, and look after his comfort, after working down town all day. I've done the best I could by him. And now, on top of it all, he says he is 'tired of working' and is going to quit.

"Then just today, he came home and told me about an accident he'd got in, and how much cash it would take to get him out. I felt I'd stood enough, so I said he'd have to get out the best he could . . . and he called me a stingy miser.

"People have told me I should leave him, and that I will ruin my health if I keep on like this. But I have never listened to any of them, even though I have grown to hate him. That may be awful to say, but it's the truth.

"Please help me. I'm going crazy if things keep up. I can't stand it. What would you do? Don't you think I've done all any man could expect? Or am I wrong to feel this way?

"June."

Why should you support this six feet of Beautiful Uselessness? What good is he to you?

It's one thing to work because you feel an urge to accomplish—or to keep the ship from foundering in a squall . . . and quite another to allow yourself to be used for the world's record doormat.

And if this big chunk of beefsteak you're hauling around were worth the powder to blow him up, he'd realize that, and try to act regular. If he won't, give him the air, sister.

How'll you handle him? That's easy! The next time he struts his stuff, say to him, "All right, Big Boy, you can quit work whenever you feel like it . . . but the day you do, you quit eating . . . at least in this house. You'll find your suitcase on the doorstep, packed and headed out! Either keep up your end of this partnership—stop whining and pay your share—or move!"

Say that, and then stick to it. It may make a man of him. If it doesn't . . . if he still insists on being a clinging vine . . . walk out yourself!

Of course if you do this, you'll probably be lost for something to wait on. But why worry about that? If you just must have a Li'l Pet in your parlor, why not go in for something easy and appreciative, like a nice wild cat.

And now what's your slant on this mess, Pal? Do you think that a working wife kills hubby's ambition and makes a cry baby of him?

How to Keep Well

By DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND

Overcoming a Tendency to Goitre

It is unfortunate that, in this enlightened age, so many persons are actually starved for one or more essential food elements. If they could but know it, the lack of such material interferes with their good health, often to a very great extent.

DR. COPELAND

These bodies of ours must have an unfailing supply of every single food element that each individual cell, fiber and organ requires. If the food or water intake does not contain the right amounts of these needed elements, there is sure to be trouble.

There are a number of ductless glands in the human body and they are of superlative importance to us. We cannot thrive and perhaps not live without them, and when they do not function properly trouble begins.

One of the most important of these glands is the "thyroid." This is situated in the neck on either side of what is sometimes termed the "Adam's Apple. Goitre is an enlargement of the thyroid gland.

The thyroid gland must be in good working order if we are to have health. The gland takes out of the blood the iodine captured from the food. It prepares for the body a substance called "thyroidine." This secretion is taken up by the blood and distributed to other parts of the body. For this reason the heart and the nervous system are affected.

The prominent symptom is the tumor in the neck. In certain forms of goitre there is bulging of the eyes, rapid heart action, trembling and general weakness. The nutrition of the body is disturbed.

The thyroid gland is not always noticeably enlarged in goitre. But there is a change of some kind in the secretion, which results in the disturbances.

It has been found that the absence of iodine from the diet may be followed by goitre. If iodine is not found in the food or drinking water in sufficient quantities, trouble develops.

In localities remote from the sea, goitre is much more likely to appear. This fact drew attention to the desirability of using sea foods, such as fish, as a preventive of goitre. It has been established by chemical analysis that fresh water fish do not abound in iodine while salt water fish do.

Fortunately for the localities where iodine is lacking, it has been found that the preservative process of canning sea fish does not change the iodine content. On this account canned salmon, for instance, is a splendid food for everyone.

Horoscopes

Sunday, September 21

Sunday's horoscope points to many pleasant, prosperous and in a way inspiring circumstances and events. Social, religious and cultural activities will be under high stimulus and there will be much to interest and gratify. Intellectual pursuits are particularly encouraged and should thrive

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a particularly active and diversified year, with all sorts of interests and aims flourishing. It is a time for pushing toward high goals, under the high planetary impetus, and with the purely personal activities and affiliations most felicitiously aspected.

A child born on this day should be clever and versatile, with a talent for reaching out toward whatever pinacle of achievement it may set its heart upon. Its particular fort, however, may be literary.

Monday, September 22

Monday's astrological forecast holds promise of lively conditions and some good prospects in employment and in new ventures, but nevertheless there is an augury of stubborn obstacle, with disappointment and delay to be disposed of. This situation may be relieved by the keen and sagacious mental status also fostered by benefic stars quickening and enlightening.

Those whose birthday it is may prepare for a year in which there may be lively enough conditions, with some recognition in employment and a degree of progress in new projects, but nonetheless there will be a tenacious obstacle to overcome, with its delays and disappointments. But the mind will be found keen and well fortified to cope with thwarting circumstances.

A child born on this day should be mentally alert, sagacious and shrewd, qualities it may need to summon to its aid in surmounting difficulties in its patch.

DISAPPOINTING BUYING IN STEEL

Expected Seasonal Gain Does Not Measure Up To Trade's Expectation

By B. E. V. LUTY

Steel buying dropped to a low rate by the latter part of June and steel production was at a low rate in the fore part of July. Buying and production both seem to be a trifle greater now. The comparison thus made does not show as much seasonal improvement as we expected by the trade or should be expected by studying seasonal trends as depicted in the statistics of the last few years. Thus there is ground for disappointment.

There is room for argument however, that steel has done as well as could be expected on the basis that general trade is not as good this month as two or three months previous, whereby steel's holding its own would be a reflection of seasonal influence. By the same token a downward trend should be expected for the late weeks of the year.

TRADE TREND

The majority of the commentators on the state of general trade continue to express a view that trade improvement is just around the corner or is just occurring now, which is tantamount to an admission that it has been on the down grade until recently if not up to date. The so-called "business doctors," by the way, seem really to be doing nurse's work rather than practicing what is the calling of a doctor. With meticulous care they record the temperature, pulse and respiration of the patient, largely ignoring etiology, diagnosis and prognosis except as they may make prognosis from the chart. One economist predicts trade improvement, at the same time saying that the firming up in commodity prices is the one reassuring factor. If, therefore, there are more than two factors altogether, the unfavorable factors outnumber the one favorable factor.

INGOT CAPACITY

Estimates of the rate of steel production average about half way between 55 and 60 per cent. These estimates, as published, are usually precise to the single point, i. e. the rate is 58 per cent, not 57 per cent, or 57 per cent, not 58 per cent. The base, or 100 per cent, is not defined. The last official finding of steel ingot capacity was for December 31, 1929, 63,067,546 tons per annum. There is no reason to doubt a prediction made early in the year that capacity at the close of this year would be about 67,000,000 tons, which would be 6 per cent increase during the year, two to three times the average annual increase in recent years. There would still be construction work for completion in the fore part of next year.

LARGE POLICY HOLDERS GAIN

The number of owners of life insurance policies for $1,000,000 or more has continued to increase. A list compiled by the Spectator, life insurance trade paper, shows 357 millionaire policy holders. This compares with 323 a year ago.

The names include statesmen, lawyers, financiers, underwriters, merchants, doctors, actors, actresses, real estate men and others, ranging from Pierre du Pont with $7,000,000 insurance down to 172 persons carrying $1,000,000 of insurance each.

John C. Martin, Philadelphia publisher, is second on the list with $6,540,000 and William Fox, movie magnate, is third with $6,500,000. The du Ponts are probably the most insured family in the world. In addition to holding first place with Pierre's $7,000,000, Lamont du Pont and Irenee du Pont each carry $1,000,000.

The list shows J. Rogers Flannery with $1,152,000 to be the most insured man in Pittsburgh.

Actors and actresses have exceptionally prominent places on the list of individuals, believing in life insurance to the extent of buying coverage of $1,000,000 or more.

This year's list shows a marked increase in the amount of business insurance carried by firms to protect them against the loss of important executives. Of the first 12 on the list, 11 were protected partly by business insurance and partly by their personal investments in this field.

Compared with July, 1929, this was a reduction of 6,429,418,000 net ton-miles or 15.3 per cent, and a reduction of 3,572,947,000 net ton-miles or 9.1 per cent under July, 1928.

In the Eastern district, the volume of freight traffic handled in July this year was a reduction of 18.1 per cent compared with the same month in 1929, while the Southern district reported a reduction of 15.8 per cent. In the Western district there was a reduction of 14.4 per cent.

The volume of freight traffic handled by the Class I railroads in the first seven months of 1930 amounted to 247,827,151,000 net ton-miles, a reduction of 32,691,274,000 net ton-miles or 11.6 per cent under the corresponding period in 1929 and a reduction of 15,316,598,000 net ton-miles or 5.8 per cent under the same period in 1928.

Utility Reveals Expansion Plans

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—Columbia Gas Company's expansion plans are now coming to light and reveal an ambitious program under which outlets will be increased in the eastern territory and under which new supplies of natural gas will be tapped as far West as the Panhandle field of Texas. Columbia is now reaching towards the eastern seaboard with four main trunk lines covering the area from New York City to Washington. The development toward the west contemplates an interest in a 1,200 mile pipe line from Texas to Indianapolis. There is great potentiality in the new territories served by this expanded system and there is no other system approaching it is size in the United States.

Blaw-Knox Earnings to Gain in 1930

By GEORGE H. SNYDER.

SALES AND OPERATIONS of the Blaw-Knox Company are being maintained in good volume. Demand is slightly less active than two months ago but the management finds results exceptionally satisfactory in view of the state of general business.

Orders for rolls from steel mills have increased since September 1. This is a favorable indication in regard to general business in this district.

The wide range of products made by Blaw Knox and the addition of new lines have enabled the company to benefit from several types of activity which have not been affected by a depression.

Utility and Road Work

THE COMPANY MAKES road building machinery, steel forms for concrete work, electric transmission towers, steel castings, steel gratings and many types of special machinery.

Road work, public utility construction and subway building have had much to do with the gains in sales and earnings shown this year. The demand for forms for concrete work has been especially heavy. These are made in standard units and are rented to contractors. Blaw-Knox forms were used in both the New York and Philadelphia subways as well as in the Holland tunnel.

Forms Used Here

BLAW-KNOX ENGINEERS and equipment played an important part in the construction of the Jack's Run Bridge, now being built by Booth & Flinn as part of the Ohio River boulevard. Forms and supports were supplied for the 400-foot arch which is the largest single concrete span in the United States.

The flexibility of the application of the forms is indicated by the fact that they are standard equipment which can be rented for other construction purposes in the future. After pouring one-half of the arch the entire assembly of forms was moved with hydraulic jacks to another location to support the second half. This would have been impossible with wooden forms.

Earnings Gain

THE COMPANY'S EARNINGS for 1930 will show a gain over 1929 when net profit was $2,838,735, or $2.17 a share on 1,309,447 shares of stock outstanding at the close of the year.

In the first six months of 1930 net profit amounted to $1,694,002. This was equal to $1.28 a share on 1,322,325 shares of stock.

During the past year Blaw-Knox acquired several new subsidiaries so that a comparison with the statement made for the first half of the year would not present an accurate picture. Including the earnings of these new subisidiaries, however, net in the first half of 1928 was $1,392,366, or $1.05 a share on the present capitalization.

The company has no funded debt or preferred stock outstanding.

Grand-Silver After Stores in Canada

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—Negotiations are underway whereby F. & W. Grand-Silver Stores, Inc., will acquire the Canadian units of Metropolitan Chain Stores, Inc. An official statement is expected shortly. The transaction likely will be an outright purchase. Metropolitan has 52 stores in Canada, operated by a subsidiary, Metropolitan Stores, Ltd.

SLOW PICKUP IN GLASS TRADE

Seasonal Improvement in Flat Glass Products; Window Stocks Lower

The demand for window, plate and other flat glass products is showing a slow seasonal improvement and was in some better volume this week than last, according to American Glass Review. Production in this branch of the industry is reported holding at substantially the same levels as earlier in the month.

In window glass, the week witnessed some increase in volume of orders and inquiries continue more numerous. While the gradual strengthening of demand was more or less general throughout the country, the relatively greater improvement was in the eastern section.

PLATE PICKS UP

Undoubtedly the most favorable aspect of the window glass situation is that stocks in the hands of both manufacturers and the jobbing trade are the lowest in some years. While anything closely approaching a normal fall demand is hardly to be expected considering the lethargy in principal consuming industries, the success of recent stabilization efforts lends considerable encouragement to the situation.

Conditions in the plate glass market likewise show a gradual improvement as the fall season advances. Both output and distribution of this product are well below normal, however, and such increased demand as develops is entirely dependent on the extent of improvement in the automobile and other large consuming industries.

BUSY WEEKS AHEAD

Some increased activity has developed the past two weeks in the rough rolled and wire glass branch. Competitive conditions in this section of the market are reported rather unsatisfactory, however, although leading factors are hopeful for an early improvement in this respect.

More activity, as in the two preceding weeks of the month, was in evidence at factories devoted to the production of pressed and blown glassware. New business is showing a steady increase, even though it is not pronounced, with inquiries in considerably larger volume. Production schedules in this branch are being augmented in preparation for the busy weeks ahead.

Kelly-Springfield Suit Is Dismissed

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 19.—Censuring counsel for "never filing suit," Federal Judge Fake has dismissed receivership proceedings in United States Court against the Kelly-Springfield Tire Company.

Counsel for stockholders, seeking appointment of a receiver, withdrew, saying they believed the suit had not been instituted in good faith. Counsel for the company intimated the suit had been launched for the purpose of stock manipulation.

Week's Offerings Of Bonds Smaller

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—New bond offerings this week totaled $80,941,000, against $134,296,000 last week, and $39,065,000 in 1929.

Master Mysteries

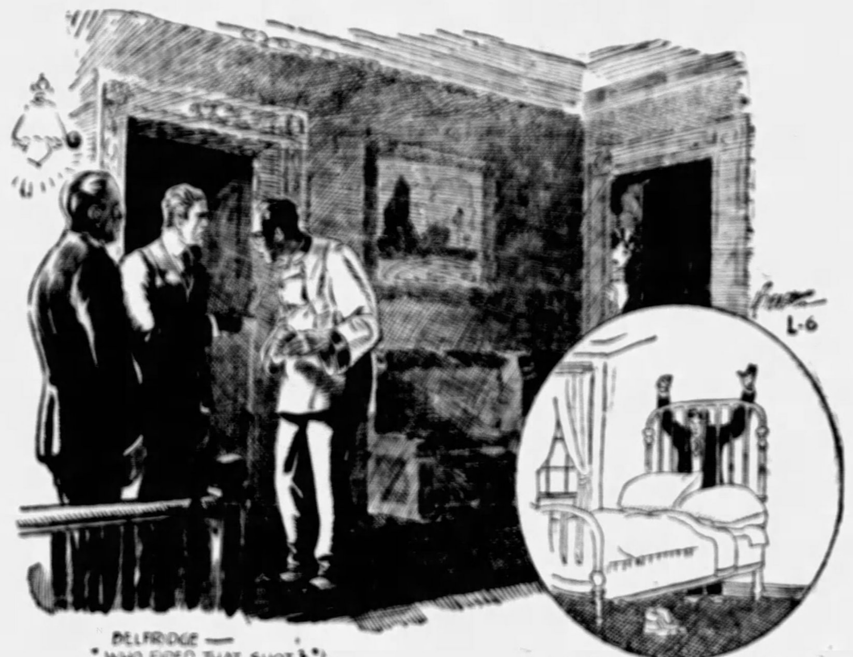
Who Killed Bob Adair?



L-6
BELFRIDGE — "WHO FIRED THAT SHOT?"
DALE — "YOU WERE MUCH CLOSER THAN WE ---- WE WONDERED IF YOU KNEW."
WEDGED IN, BETWEEN THE HEAD OF THE BED AND THE WALL, WAS GERALD ADAIR, DEAD.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

The police receive word that a murder has been committed on the Adair estate. Investigating, the message is denied by the members of the eccentric household. A maniacal laugh is heard upstairs. It is Gerald Adair, a half-demented member of the family. He admits having sent the message. He leads the police to a room where young Bob Adair is found dead. He has been shot through the heart. Robin Dale discovers a strange message Bob had been writing in the family Bible and never finished. Old Dedrick Adair, father of the dead man, refuses permission for members of the household to be interviewed because it is the Sabbath. Returning to Dale's apartment, Sergt. Jardin finds that the revolver with which the crime was committed has been stolen from him. Upon a second visit to the Adair house Dale learns that the demented Gerald saw the murder committed. He is about to tell when he hears the creaking of old Dedrick's wheelchair. Gerald runs away in terror. Jardin and Dale remain at the house overnight. They fear for Gerald's safety because of what he knows and has already told. At 2 in the morning a scream is heard, followed by a revolver shot.

Now Go on With the Story.

CHAPTER VI.

The kitchen was at the rear, facing the river, on the north side of the house. At the first scream both Dale and Jardin rushed into the hallway so that they had already reached it when the revolver shot rang out. They continued on upstairs, rushing into the upper hallway to find it empty and every door leading into it closed.

Realizing that it was Gerald Adair's scream they had heard, the two men went down to the rear of the hallway to his door and tried it. The door was open. They went into the room. A lighted candle stood upon a table in the center of the room. One of the most grotesque sights Robin Dale had ever gazed upon met his eyes as he looked toward the bed.

The bed was of light metal, the head and foot being constructed by bars held together by an ornamental string-piece. Wedged in between the head of the bed and the wall was Gerald Adair. His face peered out through the bar-like construction of the bed, his two hands were raised over his head, and he was dead! It appeared as though in a frenzy of fear, he had wedged himself in behind the bed as though it might serve as a hiding place, and as he was thus wedged the murderer, despite his frantic appeals, shot him like a rat caught in a trap. The body sagged at the knees but was wedged so tightly that it was held up in the grotesque position by the frame of the bed.

Jardin had made a hurried investigation and pronounced Gerald to be dead. Dale had remained near the door, keeping one eye in the hallway to see if anyone issued from the bedrooms. The first door to open was that directly adjoining Gerald's room (the one occupied by the Belfridge Adair family) and Belfridge himself came into the hall. He had hastily donned a pair of trousers over his pajamas. He saw the door to Gerald's room open and came toward it.

"Who fired that shot?"

"You were much closer than we . . . we wondered if you knew," Dale replied.

"Gerald?"

"Is dead . . . we were here fifteen seconds after the shot was fired, hardly time for anyone to cross the hallway or to escape . . . and, of course, the only door in Gerald's room leads into the hallway."

Belfridge looked into the room and, without any great show of emotion, turned about and went slowly back toward his door again. As he approached it it swung back slightly and Nancy, his wife, peered out into the hall. Belfridge said something in a low, sharp tone and Nancy quickly disappeared from Dale's sight. The sound of the creaking wheelchair was heard and Dedrick Adair's door was flung back and the chair was propelled into the hallway. No other signs of life were seen until long after, when Captain Blake arrived at the house.

Robin Dale had gone out to search for a telephone (there being none in the Adair house), leaving Jardin to explain the affair to such members of the household who were aroused and to make such investigations as he could. Dale finally connected with Captain Blake and explained briefly what had taken place.

It would take the best part of an hour before Blake arrived at Croton and there was one spot in particular that Dale decided to investigate during that time. He returned to the house and found Jardin apparently the only person awake. Both Belfridge and Dedrick Adair had returned to their rooms.

Looking about carefully first, Robin Dale went to the door near the head of the stairs and tried to open it. The door was locked. He quickly extracted a key from his pocket, to the great surprise of Jardin, fitted it into the lock, turned it, and the door swung open!

"Key was on a peg in the kitchen . . . found it as I searched for the coffee," Dale whispered in answer to Jardin's questioning look.

As Dale had expected, there were candles in the room, which he lit. It appeared, at first glance, to be a huge meeting room. There was a long table in the center and chairs were placed about it. At the head of the table, open, lay the Holy Bible which had been found with Bob Adair. And near it, on the table, lay a revolver! Jardin picked it up quickly and found two empty shells, the one which had accounted for Bob Adair and now, unquestionably, the cause of Gerald Adair's death, too.

Robin Dale paid very little attention to the revolver. He was intent only upon an inscription which had apparently been written but recently in the back of the Holy Bible under the entry: Gerald Adair.

Dale studied it for a long time, feeling certain that the answer to the riddle of this household lay in the correct deciphering of the inscriptions written under the names of those who had just been brought to face death. This is what Dale perused under Gerald Adair's name:

Judas! Too cowardly to hang himself . . . but the Judgment Seat is empty. And the heir ascended and took place beside Solomon and the verdict was just and swift.

It was nearly four when Captain Blake had completed his initial investigation. Dale had remained in the background sensing that, as before, little would be learned from the members of the Adair household. Once or twice Blake was on the verge of placing every one of them under arrest, but he always came back to that great stumbling block: What could he prove?

Once, in the upper hallway, while Blake was questioning below, Dale heard a sobbing in the Belfridge Adair chamber. For a long moment he listened and then knocked lightly. The door was opened by Nancy, the wife, hastily wiping her eyes. Dale tried to question her but she started to tremble, only murmured, "I'm afraid . . . I'm afraid," and quickly shut the door.

At six Robin Dale took Captain Blake aside . . . "If you'll have the whole family assemble in that meeting room upstairs, directly after breakfast . . . . we'll find the answer."

(What was the answer to the Adair riddle? Who killed Bob Adair, and why? Who killed Gerald Adair? What gave Robin Dale the clues to the mystery? Whom did the police arrest? Read the solution in the Sun-Telegraph, a week from today.)

SOLUTION TO

The Butterfly Mystery

By ARTHUR HOERL

At 10 o'clock next morning Robin Dale met Capt. Blake, Sergt. Jardin and Dr. Wattles in the foyer of the Sycamore.

"We can walk, gentlemen," Dale said, "it's not very far."

They went west to Ninth avenue and turned uptown. At Eighty-seventh street they turned west again for half a block and entered the apartment in which Billy Treat lived. They proceeded to the door of his apartment.

"We'll walk right in, captain, instead of knocking."

The door, strangely enough was unlocked. They entered the apartment. Treat was not in the sitting room. They found him lying on the bed in an adjoining chamber. He was dead!

On the bed beside him was a short note. Dale picked it up and handed it to Capt. Blake. "You poor kid," it ran . . . "Guess the jigg is up. Death is an old bromide anyway, but to be discovered is tragic. The police will be here after 10 to get you. Wouldn't you rather know that in advance? Dale, just a reporter."

Across the bottom of the sheet Billy Treat had scribbled: "Thanks—with her gone there's no use of me staying."

"I sent that this morning, captain. I figured he'd do this and doesn't it save the state a lot of money and a lot of people their reputations? He'd have had to wait through months of agony for the electric current. There's more justice this way, and it's more humane."

Dr. Wattles had been making an examination and pronounced the death due to arsenic.

"There was only one person outside of Welling who had the freedom of Zelma's apartment—Billy Treat. Billy was insanely jealous, he admitted as much to us yesterday. He had about given up hope and probably decided that if he couldn't have Zelma no one else would. He administered the poison in a capsule, right under Brandeis' eyes, and left before the shell had dissolved and the poison started its work. Brandeis ran out as he explained. Before Welling arrived, that is, before the side door was closed at 11, Treat returned and waited until Abraham had a telephone message to attend to and then slipped into the apartment. He wanted to see the result of his handiwork. Welling came in suddenly and discovered him and the only way to silence Welling was to shoot him. He shot, probably, through his pocket, muffling the sound. Then he thought of an alibi and barred the door and remained all night with the two people he had killed. He wrote his letter in Zelma's apartment. Remember, I tested out the ink here and that in her apartment, yesterday. . . . the letter was written with the ink in the Sycamore apartment.

"Treat was hidden, of course, when they broke in the apartment and he made his escape while Jackson went for the police, going out the servant's entrance which has been opened at seven.

"I found a bit of bread and some crumbs in the basket in Zelma's apartment. Treat had eaten a bite and like a man, thrown the refuse in the waste basket. There were also little envelopes showing she had been given bromides, by Treat, as Brandeis explained."

The Butterfly Mystery had drawn to a close . . . Robin Dale that night put in his collection a portrait of Zelma Shaw from Billy Treat's room, on which the lad had written: "Please love me."

Largest Food Company Buys Commodities

—By B. C. FORBES—

B. C. Forbes

THE PRESIDENT OF the largest food company in America, Colby M. Chester, Jr., of the General Foods Corporation tells me: "General Foods Corporation feels that commodity prices in many instances are so low that a liberal percentage of requirements for the next few months can be bought in safety, and we are operating on this principle."

A VETERAN READER contributes this novel analysis of what has been happening and what we may expect to happen. It is so different from the common run of comments that I am sure you will enjoy it.

"When the stock market smashed last October, several million little people were enabled to save their stocks by borrowing on other collateral from their banks. Bankers, knowing their customers, agreed to accept monthly payments over about a year. To meet those payments, those millions of little people have denied themselves and families new clothes, have sold the car, let the radio, piano and Frigidaire go back, stopped music and dancing lessons, cut out vacations, skimped, pinched, lived on nickels and dimes, while the dollars went to the bank.

"This stoppage of consumption stopped production and threw other millions out of work.

"Eleven months have gone by. Payments to banks are nearly finished. A great sigh of relief is about to go up. Each month hereafter daddy will have money to spend. New clothes, another car, radio, piano and Frigidaire will be possible. Mary's music and dancing lessons will start again. The factories will feel the increased demand and increase the number of hands. The railroads will feel the increased freight, and car loadings will rise.

"Watch car loadings and see them rise from now on."

May he prove a good prophet.

W. E. BOEING, the aircraft king of the Pacific, who has done perhaps more than any other individual to build up commercial flying and who is recognized as one of the foremost business men of the West, writes:

"I have been reading carefully all of your recent articles, and I have been particularly impressed with your grasp of conditions as they exist in the lumber industry of the Pacific Coast. Perhaps there has never been an industry so lacking in intelligent leadership, so loose in its method of finance, so utterly lost as to plan of distributing its finished product.

"Recently, there has been written a little booklet, 'Mortgages, Marriages and Mergers,' which, under a veneer of wit and humor, harmonizes in a strange manner with some of the things you have had to say about the Western lumber industry. If Western lumber men would read it, it might prompt them to 'think more and figure less.'"

The moral of the skit is that what the lumber industry needs is the death of a lot of old, outworn practices and a few notable business weddings, consolidations. The main obstacle appears to be pride.

CANADA CERTAINLY is aroused over our tariff treatment of her. A "Buy Canadian Goods" campaign, initiated by R. J. Cromie, enterprising Vancouver publisher, has been enthusiastically taken up by chambers of commerce and the Canadian people. Prime Minister Bennett's new emergency tariff reflects the sentiment which swept him into office. And he announces "general tariff revision" during the next session of Parliament. Goodby all prospects of selling a billion dollars of goods a year to Canada!

If a tariff can prove the life of trade, Washington has proved that it can also be the death of trade.

SCORE ANOTHER ONE for up-to-the-minute railway equipment in the West. Passenger Traffic Manager E. E. Nelson, of the Northern Pacific, after commenting favorably on what was recently printed in this column, adds:

"The 'North Coast Limited,' operated by the Northern Pacific Railway between Chicago and Seattle, Tacoma and Portland, is the newest of new trains, having been equipped in May of this year with 50 new sleeping cars, parlor cars and dining cars constructed by the Pullman Company—roller bearings, radio, soda fountain and all the other newest things."

For the acme of comfort in travel and for unmatched scenery, tour America rather than Europe.

THE STOCK MARKET isn't quite sure yet whether improvement in business is here to stay. The time to feel that way was a year ago. The prospect at the moment is that the fourth quarter of the year will prove the best. But don't look for miracles. Moderation will be quite acceptable.

EARNINGS DATA SHOULD TELL TRUTH

Stockholders Are Entitled to Facts, Accountants Told by Stock Exchange Official

By MERRYLE RUKEYSER

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—If the painful deflation of the last year has accomplished any good, it has convinced thoughtful investors of the need of getting the data concerning securities, instead of heeding will o' the wisp tips.

But the practical question arises as to how to get the facts when certain large and eminent corporations issue financial reports which lie either through exaggeration or understatement. There has been criticism galore of dispositions to pad earning statements and to water balance sheets, but far too little condemnation by official Wall Street of the almost equally misleading habit of some corporations of deceitfully hiding earnings or assets.

Mr. Rukeyser

Price-earnings ratios mean little until earnings are corrected from a nominal to an actual basis. This column frequently criticised corporations for hiding earnings and assets on the ground that unless accounting statements told the exact truth the policy put outside stockholders at a distinct disadvantage as compared with officers, directors and other insiders who alone knew what figures to believe.

URGES TRUTH

The regulated public utility and railroad industries behave more decently to their stockholders in the matter of accounting ethics than the unregulated manufacturing and merchandising companies. The New York Stock Exchange, especially in recent years, has been at least a mild influence in favor of more revealing financial corporations. J. M. B. Hoxsey, executive assistant the committee on stock list of the New York Stock Exchange, speaking semi-officially before the American Institute of Accountants, at Colorado Springs, took a distinctly more aggressive stand in favor of more authentic business reports.

Mr. Hoxsey's remarks are symptomatic of a growing demand in official Wall Street for earnings statements and income accounts which will help the ordinary investor, instead of continuing to make him a victim of bull market and bear market hysteria.

Talking to the accountants, Mr. Hoxsey bluntly said:

"Drop some of your over-conservatism! As I see it, it is not the job of an accountant to be conservative. It is not his to be unconservative. It is his job to be simply accurate and to see that the statements to which he subscribes convey a true picture to the average investor."

SINS OF ACCOUNTING

In cataloging some of the sins of "respectable fake accounting," Mr. Hoxsey adds:

"When accounts were kept primarily for the information of creditors and of a management ownership fully familiar with all the details of the business, there may have been some degree of justification for inaccurately large depreciation charges, for charging additional plant to operating expenses, for setting up abnormal reserves for contingencies, for undervaluing inventories and for all the other devices by which both profits and net worth may be made to seem smaller than they really are. At least no one was then deceived to his detriment, though even so it is difficult to see the advantage derived by the management-ownership from deliberately fooling themselves.

"Today, however, there is the investor to consider in addition. It is almost, if not quite, as harmful to publish inaccurate accounts leading him to believe his investment is less valuable and profitable than it actually is as it is to delude him in the opposite direction. He is entitled to know the facts, whatever they are. It is the business of the management, not of the accountant, to stand up against pressure to pay too large a proportion of the real earnings in dividends. It is the proper business of neither to evade taxes by reporting less than the true earnings."

Referring to the specific harm done to outside investors by hiding earnings and assets under the guise of conservatism and respectability, Mr. Hoxsey said:

"This is not fair to the stockholder. It hurts him in one of two ways. Either he can see no justification for the market price and sells his stock when, if he had known the real facts, he would have held it; or else he surmises that there is some factor affecting true earnings and assets not known to him, and, being wholly without measure of its degree of importance, he overestimates its true bearing upon values and so tends to continue to hold his stock at prices at which he should sell. Apart from its bearing upon the fortunes of individual stockholders, this tends to pave the way to inflation and so to market panic."

WOOL MARKET MORE ACTIVE

BOSTON, Sept. 20.—There has been a fair amount of activity in the wool market this week, mainly on half-blood and finer qualities, for which prices have ruled steady on the basis of quotations previously, according to Commercial Bulletin.

The manufacturing position still is more or less jumbled, although there seems to be a slight improvement in the volume of business being done at the mills. Demand for goods, however, is very irregular.

The opening prices at London, which averaged about 5 per cent lower on merinos and fully 7½ per cent on crossbreds, have hardly been maintained, the market being clearly heavy. Adelaide opened with prices 5 to 10 per cent lower than the close of last season there. Prices abroad are still slightly above importing parity, as a rule.

MRS. RAUH WILL RESUME DUTIES

Mrs. Enoch Rauh, director of the city Department of Welfare, will return to her duties Monday after an illness which has kept her from her desk most of this year.

She made the announcement yesterday on a brief visit to her office, the first since her convalescence, and received the congratulations of many friends and associates upon her recovery.

Mrs. Rauh called at the office of Mayor Charles H. Kline but he was out at the time. She said:

"I am indeed happy that I am ready to resume my duties and I have many plans for the work of the department."

Chief of Safety Bureau to Speak

"The Story of Steel" will be the subject of an address by John A. Cartel, chief of the safety bureau, Carnegie Steel Company, at a meeting of the Railway Club of Pittsburgh in the Fort Pitt Hotel next Thursday night. At this meeting officers will be nominated.

2 OFFER BLOOD TO AID WOMAN

Two volunteers were ready today to give their blood, if necessary, for Mrs. Rose Dick, 26, of 209 East Diamond street, in whose behalf a call was sent over the police teletype.

They are Patrolman John Greeney, 28, of the North Side station, and the woman's husband, Harris Dick, 27. Both, after blood tests, were declared available.

Mrs. Dick, who has three children, underwent an operation in the Allegheny General Hospital late yesterday. Attendants today said her condition had improved and it was doubtful if the transfusion would be required.

The Dick family was without funds for the usual expense of a transfusion, police were told. The children are being cared for at the juvenile detention rooms, Forbes street.

'STILL' ALARM REVEALS STILL

Firemen and police were forced to break into a home after answering a still alarm for fire in the building at 420 North Highland avenue last night. Later they found two stills, 17 barrels of mash and a small quantity of moonshine, they said. The fire, believed by police to have started from burners beneath the stills, was extinguished with small loss.

Three men, B. De Luca and his son, Andrew, of Portland street, and Albert Sandusky, 23, who lived in the third floor of the building in which the fire was discovered, were arrested.

Police and firemen insisted on entering after they were informed by the three men that the fire was "under control." Axes were used on the door.

Slavish Catholics Here to Celebrate

Speakers will include John Herron, president of City Council, who will deliver the address of welcome; George Ricko, national president of the union; John Sabol, secretary, and Michael Bosak, honorary president. Following the meeting a banquet will be held.

DYEWOOD CO.'S BUSINESS UP

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—In spite of depressed conditions in the textile industry, United Dyewood Company, which sells dyes made from logwood to manufacturers of cloth, was able to earn its preferred dividend in the first half of this year, with a small balance for the common. Since the low point reached early in August, a slight improvement has taken place in the company's business.

Plants are operated in Kingston (Jamaica, B. W. I.), United States, France and England. The logwood trees are grown in Jamaica, where the dye is extracted and shipped to the various plants to be treated. The French plant operated at 85 per cent of capacity throughout the depression.

Plants are carried at $4,300,000, and there are 39,500 shares of preferred stock, but owing to decline in business, that idea was abandoned temporarily. However, it is probable that as soon as earnings improve, the preferred will be called.

All were removed to the McKeesport Hospital.

A. P. I. TO SCAN OIL TRADE'S PROBLEMS

Unit Pool Operation and Refinery Control Will Be Prominent in Discussions

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—While the program for the general session of the American Petroleum Institute, which will be held in Chicago, November 10 to 13, has not yet been worked out at this early date, many current problems in the industry will be subjects of discussion. One of the foremost topics will be the unit plan of operation of oil pools, which has received strong indorsement by the Federal Oil Conservation Board and has been put into practice with beneficial results in at least one major oil field in the United States, the Van area in Van Zandt County, Texas.

Court test of the authority of the Oklahoma Corporation Commission in enforcing proration of crude oil production in the state has brought the whole question of proration into prominence. Although the various plans to effect curtailment of output adopted by the leading oil states have at times aroused some opposition, the great majority of oil interests represented in the Petroleum Institute still strongly support these measures. Technical difficulties are certain to be encountered in any such plans in application, but despite inequalities and the fact that in many cases heavy expenditures in necessitous drilling have been made with no immediate compensating income, due to the shutting in of wells, oil operators in general are convinced of the merits of proration.

More effective control of refinery operations will receive considerable attention at the institute meeting. Much has been accomplished thus far this year along the lines of curtailment in the manufacturing branch of the oil industry, but progress has necessarily been gradual owing to the bars to agreements placed by the Federal anti-trust laws.

OILING ON TWO HIGHWAYS DUE

The Lincoln and the William Penn highways are due for extensive oiling operations next week, the Automobile Club of Pittsburgh warned motorists today. The oiling on the Lincoln, U. S. 30, will begin at Jennerstown with a stretch that reaches to Jenners. Oil will be encountered again from Stoyestown to Reels Corners, from Reels Corners to Schellsburg, from Everett to Harrisonville, from Abbottstown to Thomasville and in Paoli.

The oiling on U. S. 22 is from Newport to Amity Hall, from Maiden Creek to Trexlertown, and U. S. 40, the Old National highway, east and west of Washington, Pa.

BUCS TO SHIFT GARDNER TO MOUND

THE ACTION OF Manager Jewel Ens in sending Jim Mosolf against the Phillies as an emergency pitcher the other day caused not a little surprise in baseball circles. Though used as a flinger for a few innings in some exhibition games, Mosolf had not been considered as even a remote possibility for slab duty in a championship contest. He had been looked upon by the fans solely as an outfielder and pinch-hitter. However, that recent mound appearance in Philadelphia, instead of being merely a bit of relief work, may have marked the starting point of a major league pitching career. Mosolf may figure in the box scores regularly in the years to come as a hurler.

Jim Mosolf

An attempt will be made, at least, to convert the youngster into a pitcher. That is the present intention of the Pittsburgh club management. The Pirate chiefs have a notion that Mosolf can be made into a winning moundsman, and he will be listed as an experiment in that department when the Buccaneers start out on their annual training trip in 1931. A preliminary tryout is scheduled for next Monday, an open date for the Rovers, when Jim will be sent in to pitch an exhibition game for the Bucs at Huntingdon, Pa., against the Pennsylvania Railroad Club, of Altoona.

IT WAS AS a pitcher that Mosolf began his baseball career while at college. After he broke into the professional ranks, however, he was shifted to the outfield on account of his hitting ability. He has continued to show that same batting power since he came to the Pirates from Wichita in the Western League, as his batting of .340 for the present season attests. But as an outfielder the youngster has not been overly impressive, and the management figures that he will be more valuable as a pitcher.

So Jim is slated to give up flychasing for pitching next spring, and will try to emulate Bob Smith, and others who made good in the box after being shifted from other positions. Mosolf, a right-hand thrower though a left-hand hitter is well constructed for pitching duty, standing 5 feet 10 inches in height and weighing 186 pounds. He is said to have enough pitching stuff to make him a good prospect, at least a better prospect than he is as an outfielder, and he will be a handy man to have around besides by reason of his hitting strength. With Mosolf added to Ervin Brame the Bucs would have two of the best hitting pitchers in the business.

IF FAMOUS NAMES or great football blood can be said to have any weight, gridiron standards at the University of Michigan ought to soar again this year. For included in the Wolverine squad are Willie Heston and Fielding Yost.

Not the all-America Heston of 1901-1904, of course, nor the original Yost starting his quarter of a century as a football power at Michigan, but sons of those most celebrated of all figures at the Ann Arbor institution.

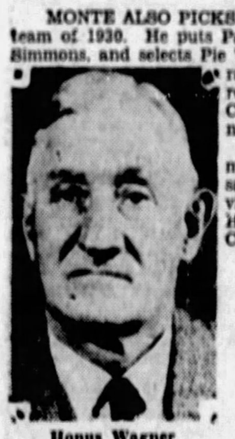
Willie Heston, Jr.

WILLIE HESTON, JR., and Fielding Yost, Jr., are candidates for halfback positions. Heston was a member of the squad last year and played in several games, but this is Yost's first year of eligibility for varsity football. Young Fielding did not spend his freshman year at Michigan, but played on the yearling team of the University of North Carolina. Both Yost and Heston are older than the average sophomore, having spent a year in prep schools after finishing high school. The famous fathers of the two boys are on the sidelines at every practice session, both out of the picture but hoping that their sons will carry on in a fashion true to family tradition. The elder Yost assisted Coach Franklyn Cappon a few days ago in teaching the backfield candidates how to block. The candidates included Yost's son, and the original Fielding could not suppress his famous smile when the youngster neatly spilled Coach Cappon.

MONTE CROSS, a Pirate shortstop back in 1894 and 1895 before Fred Ely's coming, now 61 and a proud grandfather, has picked an all-time baseball team, and, like all others, awards the shortfield post to Honus Wagner. He names four outfielders as coming so close to being of equal merit that he declines to designate the one who should sit on the bench.

Following is the team selected by Cross: Catchers, Buck Ewing, of the Giants, and Mickey Cochrane, of the Athletics; pitchers, Rube Waddell, of the Athletics, and Christy Mathewson, of the Giants; first base, Hal Chase, of the Yankees; second base, Eddie Collins, of the Athletics; third base, Jimmy Collins, of the Red Sox; shortstop, Honus Wagner, of the Pirates; outfielders, Ty Cobb, of the Tigers, Babe Ruth, of the Yankees, Tris Speaker, of the Indians, and Al Simmons, of the Athletics.

MONTE ALSO PICKS two Pirates in giving his idea of the best team of 1930. He puts Paul Waner in the outfield with Ruth and Simmons, and selects Pie Traynor for third base. He names Cochrane as catcher, Lefty Grove and Wes Ferrell as pitchers, Bill Terry for first base, Charley Gehringer for second, and Joe Cronin for shortstop.



Honus Wagner

Cross gives the decision to the old Baltimore Orioles as the greatest team he ever saw, calling it a club that was fairly invincible even without having great pitching. He thinks the A's of 1913 were superior to Connie Mack's present machine.

"WAGNER HAD NO peer at shortstop," Cross said. "The old Pittsburgh star possessed the finest hands in baseball history. He could stop anything. Good pitchers are almost extinct. You have to go back to the days of Amos Rusie, Chief Bender, Waddell and Mathewson to find your hurlers. Waddell was the finest natural pitcher I ever saw. He had a curve ball that broke from your shoulder to your knee. On a dark day that fast one of his would make you throw your bat away. Mathewson stands alone among the right-handers. Waddell had a faster ball than Grove. Rube's speea ball had a zip on it that hopped a mile. Grove's is just a straight hard one."

AFTER LOSING FIFTY-EIGHT straight games of pocket billiards to Ralph Greenleaf, the world champion, while on tour seven years ago, Tommy Hueston, a former titleholder, gained a lead of 148 to 46 in the fifty-ninth game. He turned to a friend in the crowd after he missed his one hundred and forty-ninth point and remarked: "Well, I finally got him." Greenleaf then shattered the veteran's hopes with an unfinished run of 104.

Charles C. Peterson, of St. Louis, now better known as a fancy shot headliner, was the victim of a long losing streak while touring with Willie Hoppe. Peterson and Hoppe, in 1920, were on tour from January 1 to May 8 and in that time met in more than 250 exhibition games of 18.2 balkline. Peterson usually managed to win one or two

Under the glare of the lights at Forbes Field last night, before a vociferous crowd of 25,000, West Virginia University turned aside the long-uninterrupted parade of Duquesne University, sidetracking Elmer Layden's Night Riders with a 7-0 defeat.

The contest, attracting, as it did, the largest crowd that has seen West Virginia perform in years, was a bitterly fought affair. There were errors of omission and errors of commission, fumbles galore and occasions where questionable judgment brought about serious situations.

West Virginia passed and plunged its way to the game's lone touchdown in the second period. A long forward pass, good for 26 yards, placed the ball within scoring distance midway during the quarter, but the Dukes braced and Brawley, Mountaineer halfback, tried a placement. His kick was low and to the side, and bounded out of bounds on the five-yard line.

W. VA. LINE UNIMPRESSIVE

Smacking a never-too-impressive West Virginia line with short bucks from kick formation, the Dukes carried the ball to the 21-yard mark. Then they attempted a pass, deep as they were in home territory, and a Mountaineer intercepted the heave on the 29-yard line.

Dotson, hard-hitting fullback, smashed the center of the line for four yards and then hurled a pass to Joseph good for 12 and a first down on the 16-yard mark. Brawley cracked off tackle for five and then for six more, putting the ball on the five-yard mark. Dotson hammered it further to the one, and Parriott went over for the score. He added the extra point with a placement goal.

The third period was hardly out of swaddling clothes when the Mountaineers knocked at the scoring door again. Another Duke pass, hurled from inside the 20-yard line, was intercepted by Sortet, easily the star of the game, and returned to the 12-yard mark. Dotson plunged for eight yards, but in three other tries, was EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOONS OF YESTERDAY: THE NAPOLEONIC PALINDROME—My arrangement of the famous palindrome "Ho, ho Able was I ere I saw Elba oh, oh," which is attributed to Napoleon I, permits in excess of one trillion (one billion in England) different ways of reading the sentence. At the rate of one reading a minute, it would require more than 2,000,000 years of incessant work for one person to exhaust its possibilities. ALL ROMAN NUMERALS IIII ON TIMEPIECES ARE WRONG—The subtractive principle in Roman numerical notation was not used until comparatively very recently. Instead of the subtractive symbol IV, the more ancient numeral IIII has been placed on the faces of clocks from the earliest times. This use has continued to the present day.

BUCS, ROBINS OPEN SERIES

By CHARLES J. DOYLE,
Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—The Pirates and Robins are all set for their two-game series which is scheduled for this afternoon and tomorrow. The two games will mark the end of the Buccos' campaigning in the East, and when they finish they will have only seven games to play before the curtain goes down.

Manager Jewel Ens has Larry French groomed for the first joust with the Robins, and the Buccos expect to swing against the offerings of one William Watson Clark, who also is a clever lefthander.

On the last jaunt of the Pirates to the Flatbush, French blanked the Robins, and they do not like to see him go to the mound. And the Buccos are not eager to bat against Clark, as far as that is concerned.

CHANCE NARROW

The Robins still have a chance for the flag, but with the Cardinals winning their first battle in St. Louis, the Flatbush crew sees the pennant slipping away from them. Nevertheless, they will be out to win two from the Buccos, trusting that the Redbirds will be flagged down.

The Pirates figure their chances for finishing in fourth place are very slim. The Giants won again yesterday and increased their lead to four full games. This advantage will be hard to overcome at this late date.

But the Buccos feel they have a bone to pick with the Robins, who have trimmed the Freebooters early and often this season. While it is true that the Buccos have

STATE IN SCRIMMAGE

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., Sept. 20.—(AP.)—With his football squad split up into two teams, Coach Bob Higgins yesterday held the first full game scrimmage of the year at Penn State. More than 2,000 spectators, including President Ralph D. Hetzel, were in the stands for a pre-view of the 1930 team.

ROBINS LOSE GROUND IN TIGHT RACE

Associated Press.

Rallying to defeat the Phillies, 7 to 3, yesterday, the St. Louis Cardinals again improved their position at the head of the National League pennant contenders. The triumph brought them a gain of half a game over the Brooklyn Robins, who had an off day, and put them two and a half games ahead of their nearest rivals.

The Chicago Cubs, scoring a ninth-inning 5-4 triumph over the Boston Braves, also gained a half game on the Robins and went into a tie for second place in the standing. With one less game to go, the Cardinal gain was better than a mere half game would indicate. They only have eight more games on their schedule, while the Robins and Cubs each have seven to play. They each have lost three more contests than St. Louis. The New York Giants, victorious over Cincinnati, 7 to 0, failed to gain any ground on the league leaders. They remained five and a half games behind first place and three behind second, with seven to go, leaving them an almost impossible task to overhaul all three leaders. The standing of the leaders:

Club.	W.	L.	Pct.	Games behind.	to play
St. Louis	86	60	.589	...	8
Brooklyn	84	63	.571	2½	7
Chicago	84	63	.571	2½	7

HORSE SHOW DRAWS STARS

GREENSBURG, Sept. 20.—Hunters and jumpers, the cream of the timber toppers owned in Western Pennsylvania and Virginia, had a field day yesterday at the opening of the Westmoreland Hunt Horse Show, and the horse lovers spent a busy day from 9 a. m. until long after 6 p. m.

The feature event of the day, open hunter challenge cup, which brought the day's session to close, went to the Rolling Rock Farm's gray gelding Windsor, who, in the jumpoff between himself and Prince H, owned by Ernest Wolf, Upperville, Va., won for keeps the big silver trophy that has been in competition since 1923 and was donated by Mrs. Murray A. Cobb.

Thirty-nine hunters contested in the open hunter class, and the majority without faulting in the jumps.

Mrs. Simon T. Patterson, with her pair of hunters, Slim and Thundercrash, after a spirited battle in the suitable class to become hunters, finally hauled down the blue and red ribbon. The gelding, Slim, was placed ahead of his stablemate, Thundercrash, in this event.

The performance of Windsor in the heavyweight class gave an indication that the handsome gray gelding is in a fair way to be the champion hunter in the East this season. He was going at his best, and his rider, Richard K. Mellon, received the congratulations of his friends when he won the middleweight.

ST. PAUL, Sept. 20.—(AP.)—Frankie Battaglia, Winnipeg welterweight, outpointed My Sullivan, St. Paul, in the opinion of newspapermen in a fast 10-round bout last night.

DETROIT, Sept. 20.—I guess I better get out the old nightshirt, because the National League pennant winner is going to be a sleeper jump from Shibe Park. The Brooklyns aren't out of it yet, but the Cards will have to break their jib boom and the spinnaker to lose now. Baggy Street's big problem now is to keep his pitching staff straight. I have applied for the job of being Flint Rhem's ghost drinker.

I see the Giants and Pirates are going to play a little world series in Havana. It will be a very little world series if they do their training in Sloppy Joe's bar.

PENN STATE LINE WEAK, BACKFIELD STRONG

HIGGINS BUILDS FOR FAST FINISH

(This is the tenth of an annual series of special articles, written by Jess Carver, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph football writer, dealing with the prospects of tri-state district college elevens. The article on Pitt, with photos of the Panthers, will appear in Sunday's Sun-Telegraph.)

By JESS CARVER.

Shrewd Bob Higgins, in complete charge of football at old Penn State, and his capable staff of assistants, Joe Bedenk, Larry Conover, Dutch Herman and Bill Kemmer are busily engaged in filing the teeth of the 1930 Nittany Lion in preparation for the annual prowl of the State animal.

From all appearances, it is going to be quite a job of filing, for graduation has dulled the fangs of the Lion no little; fangs that for the past few seasons have not been any too sharp.

Higgins, himself an all-America star of the first water, replaces Hugo Bezdek as head coach. Boasting as fine a personality as can be found in the game, smart, capable and fair, Higgins has won the whole-hearted respect and confidence of every man on his squad, and has his flock of half a hundred keyed up to the pitch that converts an ordinary ball club into one of championship caliber.

The situation as Bob finds it is far from ideal; it might be worse, and could be very much better. He has a great set of ends, three fine backs and then, from the heights, tumbles to the realization that he must build a line, from tackle to tackle, around one proven veteran.

LINE MUST BE REBUILT

Indeed, the line situation is such that if it were not for the presence of Capt. Deidrich, Cooper French, George Lasich, Meyer Kaplan and Earl Edwards on the squad, the outlook for Penn State this fall would be dismal indeed.

Bob's optimism and his unshaken confidence in the ability of his excellent corps of assistants to develop from a fairly heavy, though inexperienced squad, a forward wall worthy of the backfield it will support, throw a roseate glow on the situation as a whole.

With Cooper French, Lasich and Deidrich, last year's crack backfield trio, ready again, and with Joe Miller, a letterman of two years ago; Livezey, another holdover; Snyder, who did his best to turn the tide of battle Stateward against Pitt a year ago, and Evans, on the hospital list too often last year, in the parade for starting positions, State may anticipate a fair attack.

CROP OF BACKS

French was one of the best backfield men in the East last year. Deidrich is a hard hitter, alert on the defense and a good kicker. Evans, if he can get in there, will bear the brunt of the kicking. French can boot, also, and all four—French, Deidrich, Lasich and Evans—can pass.

Miller, if he comes through as he should, will be hard to keep out of the lineup. He is big, fast and has a good football head. His temperament has held him back in the past.

Then there are a flock of others who will be watched closely and hopefully. Moonves and Batdorf, both experienced; Guerin, Baumer, Hoover, Irwin, Laau, Myers, Nebel, Newcamp, Wille and Yost complete the backfield roster.

Higgins regarded his ends, Kaplan and Edwards, as deserving of rank with the best in the East a year ago. They upheld the high opinion of their coach by a season of consistenly fine play, stopping the reverses of Pitt and Syracuse and putting up uniformly good games against all other of State's opponents. Both are back this year, head and shoulders above other candidates for wing positions.

Not as good in an all-around sense as the other two, Houk, Martz, Pedlow and Tomb comprise a quartet of fine reserves. Martz has been showing great promise in the drills to date. He probably will not take the place of Neil Stahley, last year's star, but if he contnues to improve, he'll be a valuable up-the-sleeve-card for Coach Bob.

ONE EXPERIENCED TACKLE

Cal Shawley is the only experienced tackle. He can be counted on for yeoman duty at one side of the line, but the other job is wide, wide open. Red Duvall, a hefty 180-pound letterman; Roetenberg, Hesch, McMillen, Shields, Skoberne, Stempeck and Torrance are in the scrap for the job. Duvall, the more experienced of the lot, will have the inside track if he plays up to his full capabilities.

The same is true of the guards. There are 10 candidates for the two positions, with the possibility being that a great deal of experimenting will be done between now and the time for the first major game. It is almost impossible to name an outstanding pair from the list composed of Zetsing, Veneroso, Shaffer, Moorhouse, Gillard, Curry, Zarella and Flood. Zorella is a letter man, and with his experience, may develop into a competent starter.

The task of developing a center is no less rugged. Kane, Meredith and Sitek have been battling for the job, with honors about even. It may be that one of the other line candidates will have to be converted into a pivot man.

Hence it is easy to see that Higgins will need all the confidence and hard work that he can command from his men. The best backfield in the world cannot gallop behind a poor line. The speed boys must be given a chance to get started. That means good tackles and guards.

AIM TO FINISH STRONG

Unless the early opposition is exceptionally weak, you need not look for any impressive play on the part of the Lions before October 18. The idea in the minds of Coach Higgins and his aides is to develop an eleven that will be able to withstand the rigors of meeting Lafayette, Colgate, Syracuse, Pitt, Bucknell and University of Iowa on successive Saturday afternoons. If that line does not develop the going may be exceedingly rough. If it does, look out, for those ends and that galaxy of backs are good enough to carry the banner of Penn State to the very top.

Niagara University opens the Lions' campaign with a game here September 27. The following Saturday, Lebanon Valley is due and the next week, Marshall comes up out of West Virginia.

Lafayette will be tackled at Easton, October 18, and Colgate plays the Lions at home, October 25, Homecoming Day. Bucknell will entertain the Lions at Lewisburg on November 1, Syracuse is to appear before a State home crowd November 8, November 15 the University of Iowa will be met at Iowa City and on Thanksgiving Day, the annual tussle with Pitt, which last year threatened to become a State holiday, concludes the schedule.

It is time to doff the derbies to the manner in which this school is handling its athletic situation. Athletic scholarships are a thing of the past. State is going to feel the effects of its policy for a few years, but when the time comes when other major schools swing around and adopt the same idea . . . the Lions will be riding high, wide and handsome.

Joe Bedenk, Larry Conover, Dutch Herman and the new assistant line mentor, Kemmer, former West Virginia Wesleyan star, composes an A-1 coaching staff. Perfect peace and accord reigns among 'em, even when Larry Conover insists on reading Dutch Herman's paper.

Such boys! Such boys!

W. VA. BEATS DUKES, 7-0

SIX FIRST DOWNS

After an exchange of kicks, Duquesne made its greatest bid for a score. A sustained march of 70 yards, nursed along by six consecutive first downs, which saw the West Virginia line ripped to shreds and panic strike deep into Mountaineer ranks, carried the ball steadily down the field to the 22-yard mark. A penalty, a loss of five yards on an attempted end run, and an incompleted pass, forced a punt. The kick was good, being downed on the six-yard mark and putting the Mountaineers in somewhat of a hole.

Bartrug's fine kicking and a well-operated pass defense checked the Dukes, and West Virginia was saved. The Mountaineers threatened again in the final quarter when they recovered a Duquesne fumble on the 17-yard line, but a minute or two later, another forzle was recovered by Duquesne and the danger was once and for all averted.

Neither team looked impressive. Duquesne's aerial attack failed, one pass out of 13 being completed and five intercepted. West Virginia completed four, for a distance of about 50 yards out of 10 attempted.

The Mountaineers timed their plays poorly, the line and backfield seldom working together. The Dukes passed too often when in dangerous territory, and not enough when past the middle of the field, putting themselves in hot water time after time.

SORTET IS STAR

Sortet, rangy West Virginia end, playing his first varsity game, gave an excellent account of himself. Doggo Burns shone for the Dukes, both on the attack and defense.

The intercollegiate season, which was opened last night by the Dukes and West Virginia here, and by Geneva and St. Vincent's at Beaver Falls, will continue today. West Virginia Wesleyan tackles Broaddus at Buckhannon this afternoon and Waynesburg meets Slippery Rock State Teachers at Waynesburg.

Knockouts Mark Amateur Mitt Show

126-pound class—Billy Wilson, Homewood Athletic Club, won from Young Zeno, Hogan A. C., 3 rounds, decision.

135-pound class—Ralph Serra, unattached, won from Pat Powers, Ninth Ward Republican Club, 3 rounds, decision; Tony Popack, Hogan A. C., won from Steve Cavetta, Pastorious A. C., 3 rounds, decision.

160-pound class—Butch Jacobs, Hogan A. C., won from Frank Kladick, Pastorious A. C., 3 rounds, decision; Bill (Curley) Klaus, Twenty-seventh Ward A. C., won from Benny Kislo, Homestead Library A. C., technical knockout, 2 rounds.

GRAYS COP IN TENTH

YATESBORO, Pa., Sept. 20.—The Homestead Grays were compelled to go 10 innings before they gained victory over the Yatesboro club, 5 to 4, here last night. Owens and Shupnock were the twirlers, the Grays' hurler having nine strikeouts to his credit.

BUCS, ROBINS OPEN SERIES

taken the Redbirds for a ride early and often this year, they have experienced somewhat contrasting fortune in playing with the Brooklyn outfit. So naturally they will be out to smear the Robins in the two games, if this be possible.

HOME NEXT WEEK

After completing the two battles with the Robins, the Pirates will start homeward. An exhibition game will be played Monday in Huntingdon, Pa. When this is completed, the club will head for home. A doubleheader with the Reds is slated for Tuesday, a single game with the same team being slated for Wednesday.

The Wednesday scrap will ring down the curtain on Pittsburgh baseball for the season. On the same night the Buccos will hustle toward St. Louis, where they will take on the Cardinals in four battles.

In the event that the Cardinals do not have the flag clinched before Thursday, the games in St. Louis will hold the attention of the fans of the country. The Pirates are bound to give them stiff opposition.

The Pittsburgh club now is in its best shape for the season. Nearly every member of the club is in good condition and that is quite a relief.

Long's Sport Comment

a week but in one stretch he lost 102 straight before he finally won by a one-point margin.

THE NOTRE DAME football team, the only attraction ever to fill The Stadium here to capacity of 62,000 is certain to pack the big bowl again this fall when Knute Rockne brings his stars to Pittsburgh to meet the Panthers on October 25.

The Pitt athletic officers are now receiving orders for tickets and report the greatest advance sale in the history of Panther football. However Don Harrison, director of athletics, denies a rumor that The Stadium has been sold out already for the Notre Dame game. He says that on the contrary he has left more than half of the good seats and is prepared to fill all orders, but urges that applications be mailed to him at once at The Stadium.

Jimmy McLarnin

JIMMY M'LARNIN has met and defeated more ring champions without acquiring any titular honors for himself than any other fighter in the game. No fewer than eight times McLarnin has faced men who were reigning champs at the time, or who had previously won or were later to win class crowns, and on seven of the eight occasions he was victorious. Yet he never got a title out of it. In the only match of the lot in which a championship was at stake he was defeated. That was on May 21, 1928, when he lost a decision to Sammy Mandell in 15 rounds at New York for the world lightweight scepter. Evidently the poundage was too low for Jimmy, for in a non-title bout with Mandell in Chicago in 1929, in which he was not required to make the lightweight limit, McLarnin turned the tables and gave Mandell a bad beating in 10 rounds. In 1925, Jackie Fields, who was to become welterweight champion in 1929, was knocked out by McLarnin in two rounds. In the same year, Jimmy defeated Pancho Villa, who had taken the flyweight crown from Jimmy Wilde in 1925, and also Fidel La Barba, who was to occupy the same throne later. In 1927, McLarnin beat Louis (Kid) Kaplan who had resigned the world featherweight championship on account of having outgrown the class. This year he won a decision over Young Jack Thompson, who later took the welterweight title from Fields only to lose it to Tommy Freeman recently, and followed this up by knocking out Al Singer, lightweight champion, in the third round.*

THE HOLDING OF West Virginia's powerful new team to a 7-to-0 score would be a creditable performance even in midseason or later, and certainly the Dukes have no cause to feel ashamed of a defeat suffered at the hands of such a strong opponent in the very first game of the campaign. Few schools would have dared to take on such a tough foe in an inaugural game as the Bluffites scheduled in giving Pittsburgh fans the best gridiron opener ever staged here. It showed that the locals were not seeking to protect a record that had not been marred by a defeat since the 7-to-0 Geneva reverse on October 27, 1928, a record that included in the meantime 13 victories and one tie.

Perfect football was not to have been expected of either team so soon after the beginning of practice and training. Both gave their followers reason to hope for big things later in the fall. And even as it was, despite inevitable fumbling and other loose play at times, the big crowd was treated to a real battle that had plenty of the thrills that the average opener lacks. It was another big boost for night football, sending it off to start that promises to make it even more successful here than it was in 1929.

Official Hurt, Leaves Duke, W. Va. Game

They had to rush a relief official from the bullpen into the action at the Duquesne-West Virginia game at Forbes Field last night.

During the fourth period, Bob Cadigan, veteran arbiter, suffered an ankle injury when he was spilled by a West Virginia man on a forward pass play. His injury was so painful that he was unable to continue, and Harry Robb, who's been holding one end of the line, pulled off his coat and replaced the Syracuse veteran.

BOXING CLUBS TO BE IDLE

There will be no boxing shows at the Meyers Bowl, North Braddock, or McKeesport next week.

The Meyers Bowl is definitely closed for the season unless an attractive match can be signed for a week from Monday, while Jim McGirr, the McKeesport promoter, has decided to lay off for a week because of the slim turnouts and is trying to make a match between Billy Rose, of Cincinnati, and Tiger Joe Randall, of Elizabeth, for Thursday night of the following week.

Rose recently put up a good bout with Tom Maloe at McKeesport, while Randall knocked out Eddie Kaufman, of Cleveland, there last Thursday night.

The boxing show at East Liverpool, O., postponed last Monday and Tuesday nights, has been rescheduled for next Monday night with the same card, headed by Young Rudy and Freddie Edwards.

Apples Meyers has matched Mickey Solomen and Billy Brent to box the semi-final to his Battling Gizzy-Chet Smallwood inaugural windup at the Moose Temple next Friday night and also has opened downtown headquarters where ticket reservations may be made by calling Atlantic 2642.

SCHOOL GRID SEASON OPENS

High school football saw its inaugural games yesterday and last night. About 5,000 fans crowded the Scott High Stadium, in North Braddock, to see the home eleven whip Oakmont, 32-7, under the floodlights. Crafton blanked Findlay, 18-0, in its game, while Charleroi and Ellsworth-Cokeburg battled to a 6-6 tie.

The greatest number of games were played in West Virginia, where Jefferson topped Rogersville, 26-0; Elkins Alumni beat the current school team, 12-0; Clarksburg walloped Lumberport, 38-0; Newburg lost to Parsons, 27-6, and Triadelphia nosed out its alumni, 7-0.

Fayette City and its Alumni battled to a scoreless tie; Farrell won from Brookfield, O., 6-0, and New Philadelphia topped Dennison, O., 6-0.

Charleroi, Ellsworth, Cokeburg Tie, 6-6

CHARLEROI, Pa., Sept. 20.—Charleroi High and Ellsworth-Cokeburg High battled to a 6-to-6 tie in the opening game before 3,500 fans last night. In the third quarter Manovich, right halfback for Charleroi, skirted left end for 30 yards and touchdown. The visitors scored early in the final quarter. The lineup:

MRS. BLAIR, ERATH WIN GOLF TITLES

By VERN SWARTSFAGER.

Two district golf championships yesterday were added to the historic 1930 archives.

Mrs. Eva Blair, who has been knocking at the door for several years, and who was runner-up last season, defeated the defending champion, Mrs. Margaret Curry, 2 up, to cop the women's municipal laurels at the Schenley Park public links. It was a good match, the finalists being all square at the turn.

ERATH CROWNED

Paul (Toots) Erath, of Edgewood, is wearing a big smile and the caddie-masters' and assistant professionals' crown after having set down Jim Bruno, of Alcoma, 2 and 1, in their finale at the Stanton Heights Golf Club.

Two mixed foursome tourneys were played yesterday, the Highland and Stanton Heights clubs dividing large fields.

Mrs. Frank E. Campbell, women's West Penn champion, and her good-looking husband led a big field at Stanton Heights, having a card of 80, which copped low gross. J. Murphy and Mrs. R. K. MacConnell, of St. Clair, won low net with 88-13—75. Catherine and Mark Kuhn had low net in the second division, 79.

ST. CLAIR OPENS CLUB

James Williams and Mrs. J. C. Schmidt copped the low gross laurels at Highland, their 88 leading the rest of the field by a stroke. Mr. and Mrs. R. W. K. Jenkinson, of Shannopin, won the low net honors with 92-20—72, in the first division, while laurels in the second group went to W. Trock and Mrs. C. C. Stanton, 100-25—75.

Tonight members and their friends will inspect the new $125,000 home of the St. Clair Country Club from 8 until 11 o'clock.

GULDAHL LEADS

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 20.—(AP.)—Ralph Guldahl, an 18-year-old public course professional from Dallas, Tex., stole the spotlight of a great par-breaking act in the first performance of the $10,000 open golf championship at Sunset Hill yesterday. He circled the water-spliced course with a spectacular 66, an even half dozen strokes under par.

By CONNIE MACK, MANAGER OF WORLD CHAMPION PHILADELPHIA ATHLETICS

INSTALLMENT NO. 12.

Kindled with enthusiasm and hope over starting a season as manager of a major league baseball team, I went to Pittsburgh early in the spring of 1895. I had arranged a training trip to Hot Springs, Ark., and many of the players mobilized in the Steel City for this trip.

Connie Mack

During the winter I had made several trades and also picked up some players from the minor leagues. Our training trip was a huge success and we came back North with our men in good shape.

W. W. Kerr, president of the club, was a gentleman to the core, who gave me every encouragement and the race began under favorable auspices.

We started off with a rush, and it proved no springtime bubble to burst when hot weather came. In baseball, when a team leads a league on July 4 it is a legend that it is going to win the pennant. So when on Independence Day the Pirates still were atop the 12-club league, fans commenced to notice us and many predicted that we ought to win.

PIRATES LOSE KILLEN

One of the useful pitchers in lifting us to the fore was Frank Killen, one of the leading portsiders of the country, who was beating everything in sight.

So far as pitching goes, he was the soul of the team and I expected him to keep us in the lead. Therefore, it may be imagined what a colossal blow it was to us when Killen, in a game in Baltimore later in July, was spiked and did his sleeping on a hospital cot for two solid months. He was worthless to us for the remainder of the year.

Pitching staffs in those days were small and the maiming of an outstanding star over such a long period was a blow beyond repair. It not only cost us a steady winner, but it lowered the morale of the team as a whole.

The result was that we started to lose with the regularity of the country yokel bucking the shell game. Down and down we tumbled through the percentage chute and finally finished seventh in the 12-club race with an average of .538.

I firmly believe we would have won the pennant had not Killen been disabled. Anyway, we could not have finished lower than second, but I have a strong conviction we would have won, for, prior to Killen's expensive and devastating mishap, we were unbeatable.

CLUB MAKES MONEY

The cause of our slump in the last half of the race was transparent and the owners took it with good grace. Their emotions over the gloomy finish were held in restraint for another season. It was the biggest money-making season so far in the history of the franchise.

After so many years of losses, a dividend looked good to the shareholders.

Still resolved to get ahead, I started planning for the 1896 season early and made several more deals. This spring, the Pirates did their preliminary drilling in Charleston, S. C.

We stayed there a month and then worked our way back gradually to the North. Unlike the previous year, we never were a contender in 1896. At times we played good ball, but we never annoyed the leaders and finished in sixth place.

That was in the way of an improvement, for it was one notch better than the previous year and at least put us in the first division. I might add that this also was the highest position the Pirates ever finished until Barney Dreyfuss bought the franchise in 1900 and merged it with his Louisville club, which dropped out of the league.

CONNIE IS RELEASED

This was another successful season from the financial viewpoint. The owners again made money.

This season was not without unpleasantness for me as I made some trades that did not turn out as expected and the stockholders naturally were displeased.

Soon I detected a chilling atmosphere in place of the warmth that I found in 1895 and latter part of the previous season when I took over the reins.

The usual cordial relations were lacking, and I was not blind to the writing on the baseball wall. Support from the owners was lacking.

So when the season closed I was not much surprised when President Kerr called me into his office and told me that he was in the notion of getting a new manager for 1897 and that I would be relieved of the responsibility.

"But, mind you," went on Mr. Kerr in a most pleasant voice, "I want you to stay with us and catch when you can and also look after the pitchers."

I didn't hesitate in my reply. I told him that I never would think of staying and that it would be a mistake on his part and unfair to my successor to have me still on the team.

ACTION REGRETTED

President Kerr saw the wisdom of my remarks and said he would give me my unconditional release and that I would be free to go anywhere I pleased.

He shook my hand warmly and wished me the best of luck.

That ended my career in the National League that began late in the season of 1886 with Washington just 10 years earlier.

A year later, I happened to have occasion to visit Pittsburgh and I naturally called at the club office. President Kerr and several other owners greeted me warmly and Mr. Kerr frankly admitted to me that he was too hasty in releasing me and that he greatly regretted it. He also told me that under my management the Pirates had made more money for the stockholders than any other leader.

"We made money," averred Kerr, "all the time you bossed the team and it was poor judgment on our part to let you go."

PITT CONTEST INTEREST AMAZING

That used to be the pet expression of the late Tex Rickard as he stood chewing his cigar and leaning on his cane and watching the crowds milling about his prize fight spectacles.

Don Harrison, athletic director of the University of Pittsburgh, unwittingly paraphrased the great Tex yesterday as he marveled at the great interest displayed in the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph's All-Time Pitt Team contest, which attracted more than 20,000 entrants, with the result that thousands of fans will receive free tickets for the Pitt home games this fall as their rewards for being able to match or come close to matching the "official" team selected by James J. Long, veteran sports commentator of this newspaper, which will be published in tomorrow's Sunday Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, along with the names of the winners.

"I never heard of so much interest in Pitt football so early in the year," Harrison beamed. "It seems that the fans certainly are looking up to the sport and the Stadium and we'll play to some large crowds. And this in spite of the fact that they have had so many other interesting sporting events to occupy their attention, such as the closest pennant race in years in the National League, the international polo matches, the international yacht races and other big competitions.

"I want to congratulate the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph on the success of its contest. The results are amazing, not to say staggering."

(Don't miss tomorrow's Sunday Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph. Agree or disagree with Long's "official" All-Time Pitt team as you will, but look for your name among the prize winners.)

Sport Vignettes

Throughout the summer season the local boxing promoters were hard hit by the dog races . . . Now they have a new wrinkle to worry them, night football . . . As a result, none of the indoor promoters wants to run on Friday nights if he can help it . . . Apples Meyers, who will hold forth at the Moose Temple, is reported trying to switch his regular night until the football season is out of the way and the Dukes' nocturnal engagements and those of sundry high schools in the district are things of the past . . . The Hickey Park promoters, who will operate indoors at the Etna Elks Temple, also are fighting shy of Friday nights.

A movement is under way to have shot at sunrise the first bimbo who pops off that it was in the Cards for St. Louis to win the National League pennant . . . Or that they came home in High . . . Or that they are on Easy Street now . . . Did anybody ever tell you that Gabby Street is doomed as the manager of the Cardinals? . . . He is signed already for next season, but no St. Louis manager can win a pennant and get away with it in the way of keeping his job.

Credit a New York scribe with a swell nifty to the effect that Primo Carnera is just another guy who never grew up. . . . Wonder how it feels to be a couple of washed-up eggs like Burlap Grimes and Sparky Adams and still be big shots on a club that is headed for the world serious? . . . Is it, or is it not, significant that Primo Carnera is about to leave for that dear It-a-lee after having scored his twenty-third knockout in this country? . . . Remember the old saw of our daddies' time, "Twenty-three—skidoo!"

Independent basketball may be in for a hard winter hereabouts, with the South Side Market House, an old rendezvous for the teams, converted into an indoor golf course and other halls no longer available . . . Johnny Freund ought to write a letter to his Councilman, or Congressman, about the situation. . . . Now that the yacht races are over, how about digging up the old one about there being many a slip-ten 'twixt the cup and the Lipton? —HARRY KECK.

GRID RULES Interpretations

PLAY NO. 18.

Springer, of Washington University, standing behind his own goal line, receives a pass to punt and is hurried on the attempt when Grinnell linemen break through. The result is a fluke punt which goes out of bounds before crossing the goal line.

What is the correct ruling?

ANSWER.

The referee rules that a safety has been made and awards Grinnell two points.

EXPLORER TO RADIO FROM ARC

The Loudspeaker

Menu of the Air
Seeking Beauty
Relics of Old Days
Battle of Ballots

By LOUIS REID

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—Radio is being used to reveal the inspiration for some of the great culinary accomplishments of a happier America. Here, it seems to me, is a genuine service to humanity.

Louis Reid

If it can restore to the republic something of her gastronomic ideals before the drug store sandwich became her standard of cuisine it will have scored a triumphant achievement. I wonder if it is not too late.

I wonder if hearing luscious secrets of the kitchen will reform us, if hearing tales of chicken a la Maryland, Philadelphia pepper pot, New England boiled dinner and the creole dishes of New Orleans, we shall no longer be satisfied with a thin slice of bologna between two pieces of stale white bread.

It might pay them in contented armchairs were the radio men to lead some of the noted chefs of the nation to the microphones, permitting them to tell their stories of the famous dishes of the land. Failing that, they might persuade some discriminating diners—if there are any left—to reveal those retreats where more attention is paid to the turn-over of a steak than the turn-over of customers.

Radio Rajahs Seek Beauty

The radio rajahs, our spies whisper, are gradually weeding out of the microphone army those artists who are not presentable in face and figure. Not knowing when television will rear her shapely head, they do not intend to be caught napping. They appreciate that soon the eyes, as well as the ears, will be appealed to, and they intend to be prepared with artists who are as easy to look upon as to hear.

It is still a matter of wonder to me why those persons who are forever making up lists of the foremost historians and interpreters of American life never include the name of John Philip Sousa. No other figure in the life of the nation has captured so successfully the spirit and gusto of America. For more than half a century he has been the march king and there is no heir in sight to his throne. Age seems neither to dim his pep nor his pen. Seventy-five years old, he is still turning out tunes that set the feet to tapping. More than 200 marches have tumbled from his pen.

For several years he gave an emphatic "no" to the beckonings of the broadcasters. They sought other ways of bringing him to the microphone. Chiefly they relied upon the persuasive voice of Edwin Franko Goldman. Goldman invited Sousa to attend one of his studio concerts, and the march king, impressed with the tremendous scope and vast audiences of radio, consented to join the procession to the microphone.

Museums Get Relics Of Early Radio

Photographs and relics of the early days of broadcasting are gradually finding their way into the national museums. One of the most extensive exhibits when the last moving van has departed will be reproductions of the first studios—offices hastily converted into halls for experimental broadcasting, with cloth stretched everywhere to break echoes. So filled were these early halls with apparatus that there was scarcely room for the operators. I hope the progress of the sightseers will not be similarly impeded.

The ceaseless demands of radio has made the job of titling songs harder than that of naming Pullman cars.

Many hotelkeepers of New York are now advising guests by radio of what is going on under their roofs. It all depends on what they mean by "going on." Wonder how much ginger ale is sold in a day in New York hotels?

Whatever became of that descendant of Patrick Henry who was writing songs for radio? She could have found no liberty in such a task.

Novelty is the rainbow's end for the radio seamen, particularly those radio seamen who would have a bowing acquaintance with both symphony hall and the dance floor. To mix the spirit of Beethoven and Berlin—that is their problem. Those who do it most successfully find a clamorous nation crowding into their boats.

One of the most successful pilots in his knowledge of the harbors of both jazz and the classics is Nathaniel Shilkret. He can steer his passengers into either Gounod or Gershwin without trimming a sail or batting an eye.

Battle of Ballots Begins on the Air

The battle of the ballots is on in earnest and how the ears are tingling. It begins already to look like the good old days when Hoover and Smith were crossing tongues in the arena. "Prosperity and Breadlines," "American Business and Democratic Bunk"—such are the themes of political warriors.

WE NOW PRESENT

By DARRELL V. MARTIN, Radio Editor

In a small bark anchored along the bleak coast of Northeast Greenland, Capt. Bob Bartlett will tap the key of a small transmitting set tonight to tell Pittsburghers via radio something of his explorations. The message will be put out over KDKA in code, then it will be translated. The distance to be covered in this feat is approximately 5,000 miles. This stunt at 11:15 will mark the second time that KDKA has contacted a distant transmitter on code and put the message on the air. When Admiral Byrd was a short distance from the South Pole and approximately 11,000 miles from Pittsburgh, KDKA relayed a code message direct from the expedition.

DAILY TRUE STORY

By Sterrett

"I have no patience," Dave Walling remarked to his pal, Ivan Heppler, "with anyone who is dumb."

"Can't you read the sign language, Dave?"

"Or with a darned purist. You knew that I meant, by 'dumb,' a person who is mentally deficient."

"Nevertheless to be dumb is to be inaudible, inarticulate."

"Take for example this casting rod I ordered from the city," Dave went on, refusing to heed his pal who enjoyed teasing him. "You could handle a 300-pound tarpon on it. Is this any piece of lumber for bass and salmon fighting."

"It is for surf casting," Ivan agreed. "Did you specify when you ordered."

Dave went to his files and looked.

"There, see? I plainly ordered a bait-casting rod."

"Watch this," Dave said.

He thrust a sheet of letter paper in his typewriter and wrote:

J. Smith, Sporting Goods,
83 Bank St., New York.

Dear Sir:

My files show that I plainly ordered a bait casting rod. You sent me a heavy surf casting rod. Why not follow an order to the letter and thereby add satisfied customers to your list? I am returning same. Get the lightweight seven-foot bait casting rod to me at once. Do you think any hundred-pound or more fish abound in Maine lakes and streams?

Yours truly,
DAVID WALLING

"There," Dave said, "that will make him set up and take notice."

Dave Walling was not only a stickler for accuracy and intelligence but a fanatic on fishing. He had been sending from his home in Boston to the J. Smith sporting goods dealer in New York for a couple of years for his tackle.

Answer Received

His friend, Ivan Heppler, who was a chemist in offices across the hall from Walling's offices, happened to be in there when J. Smith replied to his letter. He tossed it over to Heppler with a grunt and a muttered, "Smart Aleck guy, isn't he?"

J. Smith had written:

Dear Mr. Walling:

I am not a mind-reader. Your letter did not indicate whether you intend to fish Maine waters or over in the Norway fjords. In surf casting bait is used, hence it is quite as proper to call the rod used for surf fishing a bait-casting rod. Also, Maine has a tremendous sea coast. Even if you had mentioned Maine it wouldn't have meant anything unless you had specified fresh or salt water bait casting. I desire satisfied customers, but expect them to use average intelligence in sending orders. The rod you request has been sent to you this date.

Yours, etc.,
J. SMITH

Heppler got a big laugh out of this.

"If I were going to New York I'd drop in and punch his nose," Dave growled.

"Unless," Heppler suggested, "he had the idea first after you bawled him out."

Dave had some cases on hand that would delay his vacation trip, but he didn't mind. In fact, he was rather pleased because by going later he could take his friend Heppler along with him. And this delay gave him time to go over his tackle box and order various things he believed he would need if he took Heppler along.

Among other things, he ordered some hooks.

Ivan Heppler sauntered into Dave's office some time later in time to hear him indigo the atmosphere with a choice line of strong talk concerning certain so-and-so dumb idiots.

"Look!" he said, pointing to a box of hooks on his desk.

Heppler looked.

"Nice big hooks, Dave—they'd hold almost anything from fresh water, unless it were a 40-pound 'lunge.'"

"I'll say they're big. Look at them — can you imagine my tying a lot of feathers to those hooks and casting them for pond trout? There isn't a trout in Maine big enough to get those hooks in his mouth. I wonder if Mister J. Smith gets a kick out of annoying his customers?"

"Ask him, Dave."

Another Letter

"He doesn't, of course. He is just dumb. He saw my order and just read the word 'hooks' and grabbed the first at hand—of all the—"

This time he wrote:

Mr. J. Smith—Sir:—

You couldn't be so dumb as to make such a mistake as you did in sending me the hooks—they're about size 06, and I ordered size 6. I believe that you get a kick out of doing these asinine things. How the devil can I tie flies on size 06 hooks? It would take a feather duster to cover one hook.

When I write for size 6 hooks, I want size 6 hooks. I don't want shark hooks or safety pins or shingle nails. I want, an' I repeat it again, size 6 hooks. Rush them. If you cannot read this order intelligently, get your office boy to do it for you.

Yrs. in disgust,
DAVID WALLING.

However, this didn't end the J. Smith incident. The atmosphere was twice as indigo when Dave showed Heppler J. Smith's reply, which was:

"Dear Sir:

You'd be surprised how dumb I am. You'd be more surprised if you realized how dumb you are! I note what you say about tying a feather duster on the hooks. I imagine you do, with an idea of not hooking the fish but tickling them to death.

now. You said nothing about wanting hooks for tying flies.

You ordered size 06 hooks. I have your letter before me. We have special flat-shank hooks for that purpose. I am not in the guessing business but in the sporting goods business.

Here are size hooks in three styles. I give them to you. I feel that I ought to give you something because you have given me something—an acute pain in the neck.

Yours in a daze,
J. SMITH

Heppler floated when he read this. Dave was searching through his files for a copy of his order to J. Smith. It was not to be found.

"Just my luck. I remember now. I sent the order after my stenographer went home—wrote it myself and didn't make a carbon. But I know what I ordered. The damn crook." He has probably squeezed a cipher in before my figure 6 in my order to cover his stupidity."

Heppler nodded soothingly.

"Let me see your answer, Dave."

Pretty Girl

"There won't be any answer, any written answer. After we get back from our vacation I have to run down to New York and I'll drop in on Mr. J. Smith. I'll give him my answer. He may think that I'm dumb and tackle fish to death with a feather duster, but he will also think that I swing a pretty good left hook and a powerful right-hand jab."

They went on their vacation and they had only fair luck. The water was extremely low. There was no good pickerel fishing and the bass seemed to have given up the idea of feeding on anything, whether it was real food or artificial lure.

Then Dave heard that they were catching land-locked salmon up in China Lake. He and Heppler went up.

Everyone was using live minnows for bait. Dave tried them.

One man caught nine salmon that day. Dave first went out. He didn't get a strike and was furious.

The second day out he saw a girl land a salmon. The fish darted under his boat and he gently backed it away so the line wouldn't be fouled, for which the girl thanked him prettily.

She played it and landed it like a veteran.

Then she noticed him reel in and put on another minnow.

"Have you caught any?" she asked.

Dave admitted that he hadn't. He was thinking that she was the prettiest girl he had ever seen.

"Any strikes?" she asked.

"Not a strike, not a rise—I'm out of luck," Dave said.

"You kill your minnows putting them on—you should use a hook with a fastener and loop, which permits the minnow to live, at least until a salmon bites him—and gets caught. They won't bite at a flabby dead minnow—to fish with live bait the bait should be alive," she explained.

Dave rowed over and examined her hook and the way she baited it. She then gave him a couple of her looped hooks. He and Heppler tried them, and each of them landed a good sized salmon within half an hour.

For weeks after his return Dave could seem to talk of but two things—the beautiful unknown girl, who fished like a veteran, and what a beautiful sock in the jaw he was going to hand Mr. J. Smith when he went to New York.

Sees J. Smith

Dave finally did get to New York, and he first transacted his business, because he intended to keep his word, and sock Mr. J. Smith good and plenty, even if he were locked up for it.

In the office of the J. Smith sporting goods house Dave Walling saw a pretty girl at a desk, powdering her nose. To his surprise it was the clever salmon fisher at China Lake.

"I've been wanting to see you—I've been thinking about you. I want to take you out to dinner and talk about fishing and things. Will you go?"

"Perhaps."

"First I want to see your boss, this J. Smith—I want to see him long enough to give him a sweet sock in the jaw—it is a personal matter. May I see him?"

"I'll let you know. What name, please?"

"David Walling—don't let him get away, please."

"I'll go in and find out for you." She went into a private office, and after a few moments opened the door and beckoned. He went in and looked around.

"Where is he?" David demanded.

"I am J. Smith—Miss Jeanette Smith. My father, who was Joseph Smith, left me this shop," she explained.

"You. Why—er—why——"

"Here's your letter," she said.

He stared at it. Sure enough, in some silly manner he had really ordered size 06 hooks.

"I'm a dumb fool in everything, I guess, except in wanting to apologize and take you out to dinner."

He took her out.

This year Dave and his bride, who used to be Miss Jeanette Smith, or J. Smith on her sporting goods letter-head, went fishing as far north as Bras d'Or Lakes in Nova Scotia, on their honeymoon.

Weekly Interview Solves Machine Age Riddle!

In his weekly interview with the Press, Congressman Frisby yesterday raised a baffling question, and then quick as a flash, supplied the answer. The interview follows—

WASHINGTON MONUMENT — Well, here I am again, friends. I have glanced at the papers, and note that the Florida Times-Union quotes the Knoxville Journal as saying that the St. Louis Times declares that the National Safety Council will junk 40,000 antiquated cars this year. The question arises, have we adequate dumping grounds? Will there be undue congestion? My survey tells me that—unless the old cars can be condensed, a serious condition will arise. I have worked out a solution, however. If the unemployed would drive these cars into each other, pair by pair, each car would be telescoped and take up much less room. As an additional benefit to the economic situation, many of the unemployed would get free board and room in hospitals. Some will say, "But Mr. Frisby! Many of the cars are too old to run!" Yes, but I have worked that out. If a car does not choose to run it can be thrown out of gear and rolled down hill, and it would be a simple matter for me to get an option on a bit of landscape where two hills run into the same low place, and the cars left where they collide, and the hills could be cut down to fill over the junk heap with suitable paving, thereby leveling the highway at that point.

Yours,
Horace Walpole Frisby.

...peal, Not Modification, Of Blue Law Wanted Here

Chamber of Commerce Faintly Echoes Popular Demand—Other Local Topics Discussed Briefly.

The Chamber of Commerce resolution in favor of modification of the Blue Law of 1794 would have been more impressive if it had been adopted at a time when the Chamber was in position to assume leadership in this important movement. As it is, the Chamber is merely echoing, faintly and belatedly, the demand of the public, manifested months ago, in no unmistakable terms, in the action of City Council and in other ways.

The Sun-Telegraph's postcard poll of the voters of Allegheny County brought out that popular sentiment would not be content with modification of the Blue Law, but demanded its repeal. Of course half a loaf is better than no bread. But the sensible procedure would be to base the regulation of Sunday activities on conditions obtaining today, and leave nothing in the statutes that was predicated on the situation that prevailed in 1794. To do a good job, in fine, the wise course would be to repeal the ancient law, and build anew from the bottom up.

The conservative Chamber of Commerce, still fearful of bogies that have been shown to have no existence by states entirely untrammeled by sabbatarian restrictions, carefully stipulates that no outright repeal of the Blue Law is advocated. But let it be given credit for going as far as it does. Its action is important chiefly as showing how tremendous must be the pressure of public opinion for a change in the Sabbath laws when this cautious body swings into line.

*Undoubtedly County Commissioner C. C. Mc-*Govern is badly mistaken in charging that Francis S. Guthrie's suit to nullify the county's contract for the purchase of voting machines from the Poole Engineering and Machine Company is part of a conspiracy of gang politicians to deny voters the use of machines. Guthrie's record precludes the possibility of conceiving of him as a gang politician or as the tool of gang politicians. There is no reason to doubt that the suit was brought in good faith because of doubt of the Poole machine's reliability and also because of the questionable circumstances surrounding the awarding of the contract.

But Commissioner McGovern can hardly be blamed for being suspicious. The long and unwarranted delay of Chairman Joseph G. Armstrong in acting on the voting machine matter after the voters had repeatedly shown they wanted the machines, and the slipshod manner in which the contract was prepared, are calculated to make one skeptical as to Armstrong's or the organization's desire to have the machines installed.

*Again, in East End Police Court yesterday, Mag-*istrate Charles Papale fined several men accused of operating a "numbers" lottery, instead of holding them for the grand jury, as the law requires. The attention of District Attorney Andrew T. Park is again invited to this usurpation of authority by the magistrate, usurpation which has been declared by Pennsylvania jurists to constitute malfeasance. District Attorney Park's attention is also invited to the charge made in connection with the case that the only lottery agents arrested are those who fail to pay for protection.

Magistrate Leo Rothenberg showed good sense in dealing leniently with the Communists who, at an unauthorized street meeting, protested against the $7.50-a-plate dinner recently given in honor of Mayor Charles H. Kline. Rothenberg's clemency deprives the men of the crown of martyrdom which the Communists prize so highly, deprives them of the advertising they get through being committed to jail.

...the improvement of the Ohio River by the ...vernment was a job well done is indicated by dis...ling of the demand of St. Louis business men for improvement of the Mississippi. The drought has lowered the level of the water to such an extent that barges loaded to a draft of as much as 7½ feet are not getting through between St. Louis and New Orleans. The situation is reminiscent of what used to occur in the Ohio before the system of locks and dams was completed. Thanks to the nine-foot stage no difficulty is now being experienced.

Cambridge Springs is suffering from a plague of blackbirds, and there is a suspicion that they may be starlings, a bird imported from Europe not so many years ago and now very abundant in some of the Eastern cities. If they are starlings, they will not easily be dispersed. In Washington, D. C., starlings have become a pest. The government has given much attention to the question of eradicating them. It is a curious thing that so many creatures, not offensive in their native countries, become a nuisance when introduced into the United States.

Pennsylvania's industries had 25 per cent fewer accidents in August than in August of last year. While reports from manufacturing establishments show 13.6 less employment in August, 1930, than in August, 1929 the decrease in accidents is not wholly attributable to that, but is probably due in part to the campaign that has been under way for industrial safety. This is encouraging for the Safety Congress that is to be held in Pittsburgh the week of September 29.

We Wish He Had Won

We Could Have Regained Trophy at Our Leisure.

Forty-eight states, EVERY ONE of them, would have liked to see Sir Thomas Lipton win what may be his last race for the cup.

To see anything American beaten would never be a pleasure, but we all should have enjoyed seeing the fine old Irishman take the cup back with him.

At our leisure, we could have gone over to bring it back, or, what would have done just as well, we could have left it there.

The steamship made the yacht race UNIMPORTANT.

The airplane makes it, except for national pride, RIDICULOUS.

Winning all four races in succession proves what seems rather strange, that while the British build 10 tons of shipping to our one, we, apparently, let it be said modestly, can beat them in quality, speed and other things, when we feel like it.

"Bugs" Baer Says:

Ladies Drink a Toast

Some estimable ladies in the nation's capital have authored a book of punchless punches. It is a non-alcoholic catalog of denatured hospitality and a glossary of tepid information.

The sweet people throw a lot of week-end parties down in the District of Columbia and the punchbowl has always been the registration booth for doubtful votes.

And some folks take the Eighteenth Codicil so seriously they think that lubrication means non-freezing oil.

Eyes are brighter, tongues are looser and conversation sparkles when the mule's hoof of hospitality is tickled with the feather of conviviality. We have attended many fashionable soirees in the East and the evening doesn't start until the host goes West.

But prohibition agents have a subtle manner of crashing the front doors with axes, searching the guests for contraband of thirst and taking nose dives into the punchbowl.

A ride in the municipal limousine is delightful but not dignified. And when the judge says "Ten days," he isn't inviting you to his country home.

So the ladies of Washington are taking time by the tonsils. The old punchbowl will still occupy the spot of honor in the parlor, but its contents will be as soothing as eye lotion and as harmless as a minority report.

You could put a lamp wick in the old-time punch and light it. It would burn fiercely for days guiding the storm-tossed mariner to a bigger and better storm. There was a three-alarm fire in every ladle. One drink and the guests would take off their shoes and scratch the furniture like kittens.

Which is all very lovely, but it is not international diplomacy. We concede that the average deadly Washington dinner requires artificial power like an Eskimo needs mittens.

But the motor of state must stick to the straight and narrow boulevard, especially when the back-seat driver is in front. So no matter what the men think there is going to be no tangle-foot dished up in Washington this season.

We did not dip very deeply into the encyclopedia of vapory nourishment, but all the recipes we read called for torrents of water, a dash of mucilage and sliced bananas soaked in gravy.

Which isn't liquor and isn't soup. Nobody will know whether to inhale it or dip their bread in it. But it will serve its purpose of breaking up the party very early and the hostess can take off her silver slippers and ease her corns.

CYRUS HALL McCORMICK

By Archibald Henderson

It has been said that, the stroke of an ironical fate decreed that the invention of a Northerner, Eli Whitney, made inevitable the Civil War, and the invention of a Southerner, Cyrus McCormick, made inevitable the ending of that war in favor of the North.

McCormick was something more than a mere inventor, for inventors are notoriously impractical in business. McCormick was a business genius, a crusader for his own rights and a high-powered organizer of his own interests.

McCormick's father was obsessed with the idea of inventing a reaper. His young son, Cy, followed the progress of his father's invention without interest. When the extraordinary contraption was given a trial, it proved a humiliating failure.

Robert McCormick lived to see the day when a reaper, invented by Cyrus along entirely different lines, won a complete success. He had the grace and the greatness to say: "I am proud to have a son who can do what I failed to do."

The first reaper, which at a public exhibition cut six acres of oats in an afternoon, dates from 1831. Although McCormick had introduced seven principles, all of which are an indispensable part of every reaper constructed today, improvements of great value were subsequently to be made.

McCormick was an extraordinarily ingenious mechanic. The original machine, which he invented, is essentially the one we have today. A farm hand had to walk inside the platform and rake off upon the ground the grain cut by the sliding blade of the reaper. Human harvesters, who followed the reaper, gathered up the bundles and tied a few strips of grain around them, making a sheaf.

This was not a satisfactory solution of the problem. The work for the binders was exceedingly wearying. In 1858, the March brothers solved the problem in a particular way. Two men stood on a footboard fixed to the machine. They seized the grain as it fell upon the platform, bound it into sheaves, and threw it out upon the field. But it was onerous, sweat-producing labor for the binders, who had to work very fast to keep up with the machine's product.

In 1874, this difficulty was surmounted by one Charles B. Withington, of Jonesville, Wis. He invented a mechanism composed of two steel arms which seized the grain, twisted a wire around it, cut the wire and tossed the completed sheaf to earth. The work of the reaper was now wholly done by the reaper—a man or woman merely was required to drive the two horses and perform mechanical operations.

Yet all was not yet well with the reaper. It was alleged by complaining farmers that bits of wire got into the straw and were swallowed by the cattle. Bits of metal even got into the wheat itself and actually set some mills on fire by giving out sparks in grinding.

Binders, which used twine instead of wire, were almost simultaneously invented by John E. Appleby and Marquis L. Gonham. By 1880 the self-binding reaper was complete. William H. Seward said that the harvesting machine "pushed the frontier westward at the rate of 30 miles a year. The great International Harvester Company produced hundreds of thousands of harvesters annually. McCormick's invention freed the world from constant anxiety about its food supply.

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

Out from the past comes this story:

There was a man called Jacob. And there was fear in the heart of Jacob because God had commanded him to take a most difficult journey. Death might be at the end of that journey—death for Jacob, his two wives, his eleven sons and wreckage and theft of all his possessions. Yet Jacob, because God commanded, went forward . . . but with fear in his heart.

That night, while his wives and his children and his servants slept within their tents . . . while his great droves of cattle and camels milled and lowed about the camp fires . . . Jacob walked apart by himself under the stars, alone with his doubt and fear. Then suddenly there was a Presence beside him, clutching him, and Jacob wrestled with the Presence as with a man.

All night he wrestled in loneliness and agony. At first he was afraid. Then, though he was in great pain, he grew stubborn. For Jacob was a fighting man. All his life the odds had been against him, but all his life he had been able to wring a profit from those odds. And now, though he could not understand the meaning of this strange, dark combat, he was determined that it should not conquer him.

So through the endless, dark hours they wrestled. The pain of that terrible struggle drained Jacob's strength and crippled him, but still he hung on to his mysterious adversary.

Then toward dawn, the Presence cried—"Let me go, for the day breaketh!"

But Jacob answered: "I will not let thee go unless thou bless me!"

So the Presence—who was really God, come to test Jacob's strength — blessed Jacob and promised him great power. Then the Presence departed and Jacob went on to victory. He had won his long, dark struggle. He had come from it with a crippled thigh, but that did not matter, for the fear was eased from his heart. He was at peace.

An old, old story, and no one knows when it first was told or why. But, whatever its source, that story is true. It is true of every human being. It is true of you.

You too—if you are worthy of the name of man—must go as life commands and take the chances of the trail. And some of those chances will be very grim. Dark hours will come, as they came to Jacob. You will know loneliness and loss and fear and shame and despair. And these conditions will not be mere names. They will grip you, as with cruel hands. They will drain your strength and cripple you. You will wrestle with them through black nights.

But if you have courage you will come through any experience which life may offer, with a profit. You will wring a blessing, even out of bitter tears and agony. No matter how dark the night, you will fight it through till dawn.

For the dawn will surely come if you will fight long enough. And when it comes, you may be crippled and spent. There may be scars upon you which will never heal. But the fear will have gone from your heart! And you will be headed toward victory.

If you got to teach a kid to be polite at the table, you are in for a tough time. The kid is almost sure to be happier if he ain't so polite, and he don't mind letting you know it either.

Now, Adolph was eating with company, and the company was the preacher, and there was all the rest of the family, too, and some ladies of the Aid Society. Well, Adolph had been told he gotta keep still and not talk unless somebody asked him a question.

So Adolph kept acting awful excited during part of the meal, and nearly choked twice, and finally his mother says, "Well, what is it, Adolph?"

"Oh, it's too late now," he says, "but I sure wanted you to ask me a question a minute ago. There was a big bug on the Reverend's lettuce, but he ate it all up now!"

An Island of the Hebrides

There lies an island I know well
Where any man with truth could dwell.
An island of the Hebrides
Swept ever by encircling seas,
Where overhead the fierce gulls cry
And Sullen cloud wracks scurry by
The granite hills of Mull are near
And Staffa shows on evenings clear
Like some blue cloud against the light
While sunset's tapestries are bright;
Though rough the sea and shrill the wind,
Here any man release could find.
Here one could see with clearest eyes,
And here his noblest task devise;
Eternal justice would be plain
In this remote, unvexed domain,
This island of the Hebrides,
Serene amid the storm-tossed seas.

THE SCIENCE OF LIFE

V—Isolation as a Species Maker.

To achieve that, stringent selections seems to be necessary.

But sharply distinct types may also come into existence by another method of isolation. If a species with many local varieties inhabited a large area, and then some change of conditions killed off the inhabitants of the central belt, the two end groups would be separate with their difference ready-made.

The shallow water octopus, O. apollyon, was first described from the western coast of America. On the opposite side of the Pacific, off China, another form was found, differing markedly from the first in the size and shape of the peculiar arm by means of which the male transfers sperm to the female, and also in proportion and color.

H. G. Wells

It was naturally assumed to be a distinct species and called Octopus hongkongensis.

Later, however, it turned out that these two types formed only the two ends of a continuous chain of forms which extended from China round the northern Pacific, across by the Aleutian Islands, and down to California.

The two ends of the chain are very distinct, but all kinds of intermediates occur in the northern Pacific zone. If the chain were broken, as it might be for instance by the deepening of the sea between America and Asia, there would exist two distinct types with an unbridged gap between them.

CHAPTER VIII.

Sec. 6. Crossing May Produce New Species.

New types can come into being through crossing. In the most striking examples the cross at once gives what must be called a definite new species.

For instance, when the two kinds of poppies, Papaver nudicaule and P. striaot-carpum, were crossed, the offspring were quite distinct from either parent, were fully fertile and bred true.

It is as if the cross between horse and ass were to give us, not a sterile hybrid, but mules that were fertile and could perpetuate their kind indefinitely.

This was possible owing to their chromosome behavior. Poppy chromosomes go in sets of seven. One of the parents had two such sets, the other ten; their gametes therefore had one and five sets, respectively.

Fertilization gave six sets, or forty-two chromosomes. At reduction the six sets paired up, three against three, and all the pollen-grains and eggs had three sets; thus a true breeding new type was made with six sets or forty-two as its ordinary chromosome number.

In other cases the cross gives a type in which chromosome sets do not find themselves able to pair up in this tidy way. It is therefore usually sterile; but in some specimens a doubling of the whole chromosome number occurs (usually by the division of the chromosomes without division of the cell); chromosome pairing can then occur, and so the new type become fertile.

This is known among Primulas, for instance, and in Evening Primroses; and sometimes the new type is relatively infertile with the old. Here again something like a species is generated all at one bound.

There are still other ways in which new types can be created by crossing. Two distinct species may have the same chromosome number, and also be fertile when crossed. Mendel's two laws will then see to it that a great number of new types appear by recombination.

Professor Baur, of Berlin, for instance, crossed the garden Snapdragon (Antirrhinum majus) with a wild species, A. molle. The first hybrid generation was, as we should expect on Mendelian grounds, uniform. It was also fertile, and in later generations produced a host of new types by segregation.

Of some ten thousand plants raised there were not two exactly alike. This is precisely what was to be expected if the differences between the two species depended on a fair number of Mendelian gene-differences, probably between fifteen and twenty.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—I am spoofed so frequently about sartorial getups I am almost afraid to go out any more. And you have no idea how I am being missed. Ask anybody. In my neighborhood as I pass dogs bark, children shyly nudge and whisper: "Old Odd, the Recluse!"

There are times when I just throw myself down on the sofa and decide to get away from it all. Perhaps join a nature cult and gambol about the greensward tra, la, leaping for butter cups like those esthetic gazelles who die at the end of the dance.

With my neck I'd probably be shot for a giraffe. But even that is better than this constant barrage of hoofs. Whenever I blossom out in a new suit Roy Howard or some other smart alec gushes they have admired the pattern since they first saw it blanketing the Derby winner at Louisville.

You'd think because I wear white linen spats I run around filching pennies from blind men's cups or hunting up sleeping babies to smack. And the next guy that glances at my spats, sidles up and whispers: "Mister, your B. V. D.'s slipped down!" is going to get a paste in the eye.

I've never been able to understand why a man has to be in the movies or on the stage to wear short white golf pants and lead a police dog. And if a few New York bankers had gone in more for red ties and fancy vests and less in exploiting doubtful stocks many would be better off.

I was born with a love for the bizarre. At the age of 3, so I am told, I was seen constantly toddling about the front yard with a flaming red and orange stripped mug which wasn't for shaving. And at 7 I used to cry, like a little sissie, to wear a big pink bow tie.

Starting from there, the ensuing results have been horrible. When I came home from college—The Elite College of Penmanship and Bookkeeping—the first time and walked over Court street, a horse bolted from in front of Henry Bell's saddlery and ran clear to the Chickamauga Bridge. I was that much of a fright.

I shall always remember that costume. Who could forget it? The pattern suggested a Navajo rug on a cocaine jag. Pants ballooned at the hips like those Silvers wore in his pantomime baseball act and were skin tight at the ankles. The short coat struck me where my suspenders crossed. Shoes were low cuts of bright yellow and mountainous toed with black buttons. The cap was collegiate, black and white checkered, and stuck like a postage stamp on one of those revolving globes of the world. A blue and white shirt with green hook-on tie completed the ensemble. There never was—nor ever will be—anything like it, thank God.

* * *

I have never aspired to be a Brummell nor am I a Narcissus purling puns and fitting before hall mirrors for a peek at myself. I consider myself less than nothing whatever to look at. So if I choose to floss myself up like a human spectrum it's no one's business so long as I pay my bills promptly. (Note to tailor: All columnists kid this way!).

* * *

Just a year ago in passing through Chicago in a gray and green striped suit with a wet grass green shirt for a becoming blend, a local paragrapher hooted: "O. O. McIntyre was here yesterday in deep mourning." Cracks like that shouldn't be put out about people trying so hard to make a living.

* * *

It is getting so when I am announced at dinner parties everybody begins to laugh before they even see me.

* * *

As a matter of fact there is a three-quarters view of me that isn't half bad. But who wants to go twisting around showing off three-quarter views? When they invite me to dinner they have to take me at face value—ears and all and like it. Also I have kept a room full of people laughing—and not at my clothes—all evening. Of course everybody was pickled, but no matter.

* * *

Certain meanies have sneered I write about hose, pajamas and ties hoping manufacturers will send free samples. Nonsense! I certainly don't want them sending gifts to me at 290 Park avenue, Apartment 6-D—Delivery Entrance on 49th street.

ONCE OVERS

By J. J. Mundy

Most of the ills of this world are imaginary.

Often they are mere reflections with no more substance than the crimson you see on the windows facing a brilliant sunset.

They flame and glow and dart fire, but when you get near you can see for yourself that there was nothing to it but reflected light.

Doesn't that teach you a lesson?

How many of the things that are most dreaded ever come to pass?

Not very many.

The shadow of an object can look very black and ugly, but it is merely a ghost of the thing it represents.

Always larger and more menacing, it sometimes obscures the reality.

Don't be easily scared.

Shrink away from it and it looms larger and more frightful.

Go for it—plunge ahead with the intention of conquering and see how difficulties flee and fade.

Don't think failure.

Believe that things will come out right and work hard to that end and don't be misled by nonexistent evils.
